"The physical thing, I know they can do," Nigro appraised. "In the tournament, it becomes more of a mental thing."

Therefore, a 1-0 win over Hanover in the season-finale is far more beneficial to the Skippers than, say, a 6-0 win over Hull. Once the tournament starts, it's the hottest team that executes the best that wins out in the end.

"I think we've got a good chance," Nigro said.

Walking clinic

Jack Worley, Director of the Cohasset Recreation Commission, announces the start of a walking clinic.

While a variety of walks have been designed in a number of areas of Cohasset, Worley says that he has used the Town Hall parking lot as a starting point as it is a centrally located area, offering parking and rest room facilities. The basic routes selected have, for the most part, sidewalks, various distance walks, and include hilly and flat terrain.

Route distances were derived by driving, hence, a margin of error can be predicted in walking distance. However, the error should not be more than 1-to-3 tenths of a mile on a given route. The longer the route the more probability for error. Route distances will vary somewhat depending on which side of the street you walk. You may wish to design your own routes for walking as well.

Route 1: Town Hall parking lot around entire perimeter of common in either direction. 0.5 mile; 2 trips = 1 mile; 0.5 mile walk

Route 2: From Town Hall parking lot take right onto Highland Ave. to North Main St. From North Main, take left on to Sohier St. and follow to lights. At lights, take right onto Ripley Rd. and follow to North Main. At North Main, take right and walk south back to Highland Ave. to Town Hall parking lot. 1.0 mile; 2 trips = 2 miles; 1.0 mile walk

Route 3: From Town Hall parking lot take left onto Highland Ave. Follow to North Main via Robert Jason Rd., take left through center of town and follow South Main to St. Anthony Church, take left onto Summer St. and follow Summer to harbor area onto Elm St. Pass Police and Fire Station on Elm St. to junction of Elm and Main St. then follow North Main to Robert Jason, onto Highland Ave. to Town Hall parking lot. 1.5 miles; 2 trips = 3 miles; 1.5 mile walk

Route 4: From Town Hall parking lot to Highland Ave. to Jason Rd. through center of town, take right onto Spring St. opposite library, follow Spring to Cushing Rd. Then take a right on Cushing and follow all the way down to Smith Place. Take a right onto Smith Place and follow down to Ripley Rd. to intersection at lights by old Osgood School, then take a right onto Sohier St. and follow Sohier to North Main. Take a right onto North Main and follow to Highland Ave. Take left onto Highland and follow to Town Hall parking lot. 1.8 miles; 2 trips = 3.6 miles; 1.8 mile walk

Route 5-A: Hill walk — From Town Hall parking lot take a right onto Highland and follow to North Main. Take a right on North Main, going North, then take a left onto Sohier St. Follow Sohier through lights, past old Osgood School, up hill past Music Circus and Deer Hill School, follow Sohier down hill to Mobil Gas Station on Route 3 A. Turn back there, heading back up hill, retracing steps all the way back to intersection at Osgood School. (Be careful of walk from top of hill as sidewalk does not exist there.) Once at intersection take a right onto Ripley Rd. and walk as far as post office, then take onto Smith Place opposite to post office. Follow Smith Place to Cushing Rd. then take a left onto Cushing Rd. Take next right onto Pleasant St. Go up Pleasant to top of hill, then take left onto Old Pasture Rd. Follow Old Pasture to Clay Spring Rd. which will lead you onto Pond St. Take a left on Pond and follow past CHS, then down hill, where you should take another left onto Cushing Rd. Follow Cushing to Pleasant St. and follow to Depot Court. At the end of Depot Court, cross Main St. onto Robert Jason Rd. which leads to Highland Ave. and to Town Hall parking lot. 5.0 miles; 2 trips = 10 miles; 5.0 miles with hills.

Route 5-B: Variation of 5-A hill walk — Follow route 5-A directions to Mobil Gas Station, then reverse track and take same route directly back to Town Hall parking lot. 2.6 miles; 2 trips = 5.2 miles; 2.6 miles with hills

These are some basic routes which you may follow. You may wish to combine some of the routes or design your own. There are ample off-road routes that could also be utilized along the railroad bed or by plotting a course through some of the reservations/parks. Any route you use must be done with safety in mind. Routes that are on-road are best if there is a sidewalk present. Should you walk after dark or at dusk, be certain to wear light-colored clothing, use a reflector strap and carry a lighted flashlight aimed at your feet or lower body. Try to design your walk so you are facing oncoming traffic unless sidewalks dictate otherwise. Any problems with stray dogs should be reported to the dog officer by calling 383-1212.

Peraino, who, along with Kristen Stemple of Carver, was called one of the "top two sophomores in the league," by Bostwick.

Bostwick also mentioned Jackie Goines as a team Unsung Hero. Goines started a few weeks ago in place of an injured regular.

With the state tournament right around the corner, Bostwick speculated that the team would be seeded between fifth and eighth in the 18 team pool.

The high seed would be even more impressive considering the fact that Cohasset is playing a shortened slate.

"We are playing only a 17 game schedule," said Bostwick, referring to the fact the seeds are based on points: two for a win and one for a tie. "That puts a damper on things."

To recognize the veterans that have led the way to this terrific season, the Skippers will host Scituate Friday for a Senior Recognition Game.

While the days are getting shorter, the Lady Skippers' season seems to be getting longer. And while temperatures are getting lower, their win total just keeps on growing higher.

Most recently, the Lady Skippers defeated local rival Hull, 1-0. The shutout was their second of the year of the Lady Pirates after a 4-0 thrashing in early October.

The girls finish up the regular season on Friday at home against non league opponent Scituate (3-7-1).

Town hopes for calm Halloween

mendation from Noonan, established 4-8 p.m. as trick or treating hours for children. They also recommended parents set a 9:30 p.m. curfew for teenagers. "It's only a guideline for parents," said Noonan about the curfew. "It's not really enforceable; kids won't be subject to arrest."

Noonan said if things were bad enough, selectmen could enact a mandatory curfew, but as of now, he doesn't think such a drastic move is warranted.

"If we were having death and destruction, selectmen could authorize a formal curfew, but I don't think things are quite that serious," he said. "It's just a suggested guideline.

"Fortunately [Halloween] is on a school night, so there's no need for kids to be out roaming around."

A dance is also scheduled at The Garage for students in grades six to eight, from 7-10 p.m., said recreation department director Jack Worley, who is also chairman of the youth resources committee. He added that dances don't attract many high school-age students, so the committee is focusing instead on students in grades six to eight.

The Rev. Cliff Cutler of St. Stephen's Church and chairman of the town's drug and alcohol committee pointed out that rowdy behavior by some last year shouldn't be used as a label for all Cohasset youth.

"Our young people are really wonderful kids to be around," he said. "Anyone who has ever had an association with them or gone down to Appalachia with them knows what a good group of young people they are.

"There are some who act out and a small number did last year, but I think that reflects their own insecurity," he added. Cutler called for parents to pay attention to what their children are doing Halloween night and hoped they would abide by the curfew. But he added if youths do again act out, the town should act appropriately.

Jane Pescatore, president of the Cohasset PSO, said the past incidents aren't just examples of "kids just being kids."

"They went beyond fun [last year]," she said. "Kids just got way out of control, and it wasn't, unfortunately, the first time.

"There is a recurring history of kids going out and running amuck and not having any conscience as to what they are doing, where they are doing it or why they are doing it."

Pescatore said it's up to parents to ensure a pleasant night. "I just think it's the parents' responsibility, not the schools, not the police, to see what their children are doing and have them under control. Parents have to give guidelines as to what is and what isn't acceptable behavior.

"Running amuck is not acceptable behavior."

Parent forum to address teen behavior of St. Stephen's Church at 7 p.m., Nov. 1 at the middle-high school cafeteria. Cutler is also chairman of the town Drug and Alcohol Committee.

In addition to parents and other residents, joining the forum will be mental health professionals, clergy, community leaders, school officials and law enforcement officers in a roundtable discussion of risky behaviors exhibited by Cohasset youth, Gill said.

Gill explained that information gathered from the survey is used to modify the health curriculum. For example, if the survey shows marijuana use continues to be high, the health classes will address that.

But Gill said information is key and therefore, wants to clue parents in about what their kids are doing.

"Kids are not getting high in school apart from the occasional incident," he said. "Ninety-nine percent of what is being exhibited is not on our watch but on their watch," Gill said about parents.

"We have the information and we should give it to them."

Gill said survey results are not particularly surprising due to the cultural pressures on today's youth that includes everything from movies to MCAS (high-stakes testing). Still he finds the results disturbing.

"The perception young people have that marijuana is a harmless drug, that perception concerns me," he said about the survey results. At the middle school, 17 percent of the youngsters have already tried marijuana, the survey revealed.

But of greater concern, he said, is the number of youngsters who have contemplated suicide.

"I'm never really surprised by the drugs and alcohol considering the culture we live in," Gill said. "But I am surprised and alarmed by the number of students who had serious thoughts of suicide."

Gill said it is a trend he noticed over the past two surveys and is the same way throughout the state and nation.

"Just being a kid today is a stressful time for young people," he said. Thirty-three students at the high school have contemplated suicide and 41 at the middle school, according to survey results.

He explained that school staff constantly looks for danger signs such as depression, talking about suicide or even artwork or pictures that are disturbing.

"We try and identify kids who are having difficulty. We're pretty good at that because we're a small school," Gill said.

School districts are required to conduct some kind of behavior assessment in order to receive grant money, Gill said. Although he concedes that a few students may lie on the survey, the overall results reflect accurate trends which are consistent when compared with other school districts, he said. Students in grades 7-11 participated in the survey which is paid for through the Mass. tobacco tax.

Gill said the forum is open to all and encourages parents to attend even if their children aren't involved in risky behavior.

"I, as a parent, would like to know the problems in town and what kids are dealing with at the various age levels," Gill said.

Copies of the survey results were recently sent to parents in the Health Education Newsletter. For more information, call Gill at 383-6107.

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Our "Schools In" column is off to a great start. Thank you to all who are getting the information to me. Please send any news, field trip info, school happenings and anything that relates to your school, class or staff member to jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or call (781)923-1057. All photos of events or happenings are also welcomed. Also, if anyone has any comments, suggestions or items they would like to see in this column, please pass it along.

Attention parents, neighbors and friends of the Cohasset Osgood and Deer Hill Schools! Here is an opportunity to show your child another way you can make a difference in their lives! On Saturday, Oct. 28, "Make A Difference Day" will be in full swing at the Joseph Osgood School and the Deer Hill School. Make a Difference Day is a national event sponsored by USA Weekend Magazine in Partnership with the Points of Light Foundation in an effort to show the power of one person to make a difference. This year, there will be plenty of opportunities for parents and students to help out at both schools. Get into the swing and come prepared to "Make a Difference!"

Cohasset firefighters state a great escape! On Oct. 17, the Cohasset Firefighters staged "The Great Escape" promotion at the Osgood Elementary School. The Great Escape is a national promotion sponsored by the NFPA.(National Fire Prevention Association) Students got a close up view of the rescue vehicles, including ambulances and fire trucks. Firefighters who participated included Captain James Runey, Tom Finegan, Jack Hernan and Frank Mahoney.

We have some really "tasty" information about a delicious fundraiser being held by the Deer Hill representatives. Beginning Oct. 27, the Deer Hill representatives will sponsor a Pizza Kit Sale. For every Pizza Kit sold, the fund will receive $5. This money is going to be put towards the purchases of "Alpha Smart" keyboards, a very helpful tool for children to use in school. Kit prices begin at $15 for three pizza and all are a delicious way to make a great dinner on the nights you don't want to cook. So help out your local Deer Hill students, stock up on some pizza kits and forget about making dinner from scratch!!!

Just a reminder... It is time to honor those young women who have consistently attended and participated in the practices and games during these last few months. Parents, if you have not received your invitation and assignment to this Pot Luck Banquet, please dig through those soccer bags. It is to be held on Nov. 6 at 6:30 and will take place at St. Stephens Hall. It will be a great night and we look forward to seeing all the junior varsity and varsity players and parents at this wonderful event.

CASA/T.I.P.S.: a parents' program to bridge the parent-child communication gap in the area of alcohol use and abuse will be led by Edward McCann on Wednesday, Nov. 8 from 7-9:30 p.m. at the Teen Center Garage on Parkingway in Cohasset. The program is limited to 30 parents. Registration forms are available at the Cohasset Town Hall and the Cohasset, Hull, Hingham and Scituate Libraries. These forms need to be returned by Oct. 30 with a $20 course fee to the Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025. The Parents Program is part of T.I.P.S (Training for Intervention by Procedures by Servers of Alcohol.) In addition to parent-child communication, the programs purpose is to help prevent troublesome situations involving alcohol, to deal with situations where people have already had too much to drink, and to influence relatives, friends and neighbors to exercise control and act responsibly when using and serving alcohol. This is important training in light of the new "Social Host Law", where adult hosts of parties bear responsibility for underage drinking. With the approaching holidays, the program will teach acceptable standards of practice for serving and consuming alcohol among family, friends and neighbors. McCann, a certified T.I.P.S. trainer and member of Servexcel, Inc,. a Training Resource Group, says "Experts agree that parents are the most important role models for their children." Each adult who participates in the program will provide a course handbook and, at the end of the evening and upon successful completion, a certificate.

Although it seems like ages away before these issues come up, before I know it, we will be dealing first-hand with direct or indirect contact with my children, their friends and alcohol. I hope to be as prepared as I can be when the time comes, to deal with all the situations the best way that we, as a family can. Keeping well informed by programs like the one mentioned above, can only help a very difficult subject.

Please remember to keep the school news coming, staff, parents and administrators alike. I would like to start a "wish list" area, a recognition area of a staff member or student who has made a difference and add to our photos of the schools. If you have anything to send for the column, please call (781)923-1057, email to jenpiep@yahoo.com or send it to 622 CJC Highway, Cohasset, MA 02025. Have a Great Week!

Halloween dance

The Cohasset Youth Resources Committee will conduct a Halloween, costumes optional, dance for grades 6 to 8 on Tuesday, Oct. 31, at the Garage from 7 to 10 p.m. Admission is $5 per person and prizes will be awarded for various costume categories.

Youngsters must be picked up by 10 p.m. by an adult or parent. No child will be released from the dance without an adult present and accountable for each of the youngsters.

Any parent or adult who wishes to help chaperone, may call Jack Worley at the recreation office at 383-4109.

Baby's first trophy is a real keepsake

Women launch unique Cohasset-based business

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Winnie Donovan of Scituate may be 76-years-old but a little thing like age isn't about to slow her down.

The entrepreneur, armed with a creative idea, wasted no time enlisting one of her daughters, Regina Keller, to help her launch it.

Even the name of her Cohasset-based company — Nav-O-Nod (Donovan backwards) — is about as unique as the "Baby's First Trophies," Donovan is selling.

The women took the tradition of bronzing baby shoes a step further. They enclose a baby's favorite pacifier in a clear acrylic, 3 in. cube and install it on a wooden base with small plate for engraving.

They also offer pewter girl and boy tooth fairies that hold a child's first lost tooth in their hands. The miniature statues are then encased in acrylic cubes and put on a base.

Donovan, who is married and the grandmother of 18, said she got the idea during a lunch that her sister had with friends.

"One had a granddaughter there who was six or seven and we talked about binkies (pacifiers). She said she thought her granddaughter would never give it up and had to be bribed with a toy to get it away," she recalled. Then Donovan thought they "ought a bronze those things."

The next thing you know, Donovan investigated bronzing but learned it would melt the plastic, so she and Keller looked into using acrylic.

Keller, who is employed part-time in Scituate as a school bus driver, works with her mother at the Nav-a-Nod office in Cohasset Plaza above the Shoe Market.

The women are busy launching a website — www.babysfirsttrophy.com — and sending brochures through direct mail to potential customers. The pacifier trophies cost $99.95 plus lettering, shipping/handling and tax. The tooth fairy trophies run $125 each.

A self-described "entrepreneur wannabe," Donovan said she and Keller are encouraged by the early response to their product.

"If you like it, you like it," she says. The women said passersby were enthusiastic about the trophies at their table during the recent Octoberfest in North Scituate.

Donovan, who ran the Fritter Boat in Scituate Harbor for many years after she retired from Johnson and Johnson where she worked as a sales coordinator, is excited about being back in business.

"It's exciting meeting young people," she said. "It's just fun, fun."

Nav-O-Nod can be reached at 383-3591.

Women & Government

Making a difference

Marshfield woman worked in Dukakis administration

By Kathleen Zigmont

If you're unhappy with the way you're government is working for you, get involved. That's what Norma Fenochietti of Marshfield did, and decades later, Fenochietti can say she made a difference.

A member of the Democratic National Committee and the Democratic State Committee right up to her retirement a few years ago, Fenochietti made it to the State House during the Mike Dukakis years, all the while helping to run a family business and raise five children.

"Back when I got started in government, it was not something women did," said Fenochietti, 72.

"But it was a wonderful, exciting time, and I can truly say we got something done," said Fenochietti, who said women's issues became very important to her.

Fenochietti, who worked as Dukakis' director of scheduling and as chief of staff to the head of the Mass. Turnpike Authority in the 1980's, said she worked for men who were sensitive to women's issues.

"There was a change coming around then. It was almost 50-50 men and women in Dukakis' cabinet. And a female chief of staff was almost unheard of then. You have to be working for men who were comfortable with themselves," she said. During that time, Fenochietti said, she saw action taken on issues like equal pay for equal work, sexual harassment at the workplace, day care for children.

"Women, all women, are not only career people, but they are mothers, caregiver to elderly parents, teachers to their children. Women bring something different to the table."

— Norma Fenochietti

"This is the perspective that women bring. Women, all women, are not only career people, but they are mothers, caregiver to elderly parents, teachers to their children. Women bring something different to the table," she said.

Fenochietti said she was fortunate to be able to bring her voice to the table.

"Being a mother, I was able to bring forward those issues that affect families," she said.

Fenochietti said she got involved in local politics in the late 1950's, as a young mother helping to run a family business. Fenochietti said her dealings with local government led her to get involved.

"As you deal with government, you realize how important it is to your quality of life. A whole gamut of issues, from zoning to the minimum wage to health care, are affected," she said.

Fenochietti said she enjoyed her early involvement with the Democratic State Committee, where she started out in the mid 1970's, and eventually was vice chair of the DSC for 12 years.

Working for the DSC, Fenochietti said, allowed her to push the issues important to her.

"With that kind of work, you had to choose a couple of issues to really focus on so you wouldn't be all over the board. But it was exciting to see things come to fruition," said Fenocietti, who saw the DSC expanded to include more women and minorities during her tenure.

Fenochietti said that while she saw sides of government most people don't get to see, anyone can, and should, get involved.

"Women have a tendency to work in coalitions. They're very good at bringing other people in to work on issues, and that's how we're able to push agendas like health care, breast cancer funding, day care. There's strength in numbers," she said.

Fenocietti said that women have a lot to offer government.

"Get involved. Get active in one or two issues that are important to you, tat you feel strongly about. That's the way to get started. Once you get involved, you can see up close how our elected officials work, and you can take it from there," she said.

Fenochietti said she sees women becoming more and more powerful in government in the future.

"Every day more women get involved. We're seeing more female legislators, more women in the workforce at a higher level. Women are a force out there."

Susan Phippen at the Scituate selectmen's office.

Standing out in a crowd

Lone female selectman makes her voice count

By Ellen L. Walsh

Being the lone woman on the five-member Scituate Board of Selectmen means Susan Phippen can't blend into the background.

"I feel that my decisions are scrutinized a little harder than the decisions of my fellow selectmen," she says, although she considers herself an equal member and doesn't shrink away from making tough decisions.

Phippen's road to running for and ultimately becoming elected to the board was long but she feels it has been a natural progression. She ran for the position in 1987 and 1988 and lost both races. She ran again in 1995 and won.

"I think it was because people in the town new me better," Phippen recalls about winning a position on the board.

In her 20 years of service to the town, she has held positions with the Zoning Board of Appeals, the Conservation Commission and the Landfill Task Force Committee.

Although she thinks it is difficult for a women to be involved in local government, she does feel they can be an asset. There are a lot of decisions to be voted on and Phippen does her homework. She spends a lot of time at the local library as well as talking to town residents.

"When it comes to the issues, if my brain and heart agree, then it has to be the right decision. I don't have my own agenda," she explains.

Phippen feels her greatest asset to the board and the town is her clear thinking. "I can take information and synthesize it to make it clear to all parties involved."

Phippen does believe that regardless of gender, the eyes of the public set a higher standard for those in office. "Even in my everyday activities I feel scrutinized," she says.

Being on the board can take up a lot of Phippen's time. "Besides biweekly board meetings I have six or seven liaison positions that involve frequent meetings. I also attend numerous ceremonial activities for the town. I can have a 10 o'clock morning meeting and then a 2 o'clock afternoon meeting.

"My days are broken up and can require that I change clothes two to three times a day. And I'm always reachable, day or night," Phippen says.

She recommends women get involved in local government. "Women bring their common sense along with their calming effect," she says.

"Whether the positions are appointed or elected, getting involved can be a rewarding experience. You do have to have patience because town government moves slowly. However, once you become involved, you soon realize you can truly make a difference."

Phippen has one year remaining of her current term. She hasn't decided if she will run again. "I think it is good for the board to have new blood," she says.

Running a $40 million business

Beth is at the helm of Plymouth government

By David Tibbetts

Government is in Eleanor Seaton Beth's blood. Beth grew up in a political family that discussed politics at the dinner table or cocktail parties, and volunteered for local government service. Throughout her life she has worked in professions closely related to government, whether as a reporter for a community newspaper in Scituate or as a political consultant advising towns on financial strategies. It's not surprising that Beth is now the town manager of Plymouth, one of the largest communities in the state in terms of square miles. In a state renowned for its male-dominated politics, Beth is one of a growing group of women building successful careers as strong government administrators in Massachusetts.

"There are many theories about why women have risen to the highest levels of elective government in other states but not in Massachusetts," Beth said. "The same can be said about government management. It probably goes back to our puritan roots, or Pilgrim roots as we would say in Plymouth. But there are many women making inroads now as town administrators and town managers, which is a stronger form of government."

As Plymouth's town manager, Beth is in charge of the day-to-day operations of a community that can be likened to a $40 million business. She has to address the daily needs and operations of town hall, the fire department, the police department and the public works department. For Beth, it has been a bit of a struggle to win the acceptance and respect of departments historically dominated by men. A little creativity helps.

"The fire department, police department and public works department, in any town, are generally not bastions of feminism," Beth said. "These guys have to take orders from me, and that creates some difficulties. I've done a few things to improve those relations. For example, I participated in a fire training session with the Plymouth Fire Department at the Bourne training facility. I strapped on all the gear they wear and went into a live burn with a thermal imaging camera to practice locating an unconscious person in a building completely blackened by smoke. It gave me insights and appreciation into what they do, and it also helped me win their respect." Training with fire fighters to experience what they do is one example of the kind of advantages that women bring to government, Beth said. She believes that women excel at bringing people together to find a consensus that allows opposing parties to better understand each other.

"The fire department, police department and public works department, in any town, are generally not bastions of feminism. These guys have to take orders from me, and that creates some difficulties."

— Eleanor Beth

"That's certainly a generalization," Beth said. "But there is some truth, I think, to the idea that finding common ground is something women are good at achieving. I have an ego too, like anyone in government. But my focus is on figuring out how we can all air our concerns and work together." In a town like Plymouth, it's important that the local departments work together toward a common goal. Plymouth is looking for financial alternatives to the defunct nuclear power plant that no longer supplies the town with tax revenue. The town is also one of the five fastest growing communities in Massachusetts. There is also some discussion in town of changing the form of local government from a board of selectmen and a town manager to a more urban model with an elected mayor. If nothing else, the town manager's job in Plymouth is never boring.

It was not a foregone conclusion that Beth would end up with a career in government. After graduating from college as a political science major, Beth worked in a few vaguely governmental jobs. She eventually left the working world to have children. After giving birth her first child in the 1970s, Michael, Beth sought a profession that would allow her to work at home. She ended up covering local government meetings in Scituate for "The Scituate Mirror" newspaper. Beth continued working at the newspaper even after the birth of her second child, Laura.

"I learned a lot about the way local government works through my work for the newspaper and through my membership in The League of Women Voters," Beth said. "Then in 1980, the late Don Brown, a former Scituate selectman, suggested that I run for selectman in Scituate against a two-term incumbent. I said, 'you've got to be kidding; I've got a two-year-old and a five-year-old.' But I did it anyway, and I won the first of two terms in 1981, the year Proposition 2-1/2 was enacted."

Serving as a selectman, staying involved with politics and raising children consumed all of Beth's time. She also experienced some unique personal moments with her family.

"When my daughter was three, she was walking around the house once with my purse pretending to be like me," Beth said. "I asked her if she was going shopping, but she informed me that she was going to a meeting. That's what I remember about those days. I spent an awful lot of time at meetings, and a lot of time on the phone fending off my children when they wanted things from me while I was trying to carry on adult conversations."

Beth's experience with Proposition 2-1/2 served her well. She got a job with the state Department of Revenue (DOR) helping towns cope with the limitations imposed by Proposition 2-1/2. During her time at DOR, she also did some management work on Bill Golden's first campaign for state senator. Beth left DOR for a job as a municipal consultant with a former Scituate town administrator. For four years, she helped towns with capital improvement plans and other forms of long-range planning.

"After doing that for a while, I decided it was time to get a real job," Beth said. "Plymouth was advertising a job for a new executive secretary. I helped the charter review commission change the form of government from executive secretary to a town manager form. I began working for the town of Plymouth in 1990, and when the form of government changed in 1991, I became the assistant town manager."

Beth served as assistant town manager until 1994, when the town manager left. At the time, she didn't want the full town manager's job because she still had teenagers at home and needed time for her family.

"Everything I did for employment I did because it was a good job and it allowed me to be with my kids as much as possible," Beth said.

She served as acting town manager for six months, hired her successor and served as his assistant manager until he was fired in June, 1998. At that point, she accepted an offer to be town manager, and she still serves Plymouth in that capacity.

Beth feels fortunate that she was able to build a successful career from simple beginnings as a local government volunteer. "Women just didn't do the things that I've done back when I first had my children," Beth said. "In those days, women didn't work for money; they volunteered. It's not always the case that a woman can raise children and build a successful career. I'm very fortunate."

Justice to be installed as new First Parish minister Nov. 5

The Rev. Jennifer Justice will be installed formally as the new minister of the First Parish Church in a 4 p.m. service, Sunday, Nov. 5, in the First Parish Meeting House, although she has served in that capacity since Sept. 1.

The new minister at the Unitarian Universalist church in Cohasset calls Boston "home" although she was born in the south and spent her young adulthood on the west coast.

Justice attended Harvard Divinity School after a career in performance arts and as a storyteller. Her calling took her to the parish in Provincetown where she established a highly respected ministry in response to the special needs of that community.

After successfully re-building the congregation and years of constantly ministering to the victims of AIDS, both those dying and those left mourning, she accepted the ministry in the York, Pennsylvania, Unitarian Universalist parish.

The York congregation experienced a resurgence under Justice, and during her two years there she oversaw the rebuilding of their parish house and expansion of the membership. But New England still had a pull on her, and last spring she accepted the call of the Cohasset church.

First Parish in Cohasset lost its minister of 26 years when in 1995 the Rev. Edward T. Atkinson died suddenly of a heart attack. Several years of interim ministers followed while the congregation searched for a worthy replacement for Atkinson.

The Rev. Jennifer Justice will be formally installed as minister of First Parish at 4 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 5.

In 1997 the Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox accepted the call of the parish to be their new minister, at the end of Tarbox's first year she was diagnosed with cancer. The following year, Tarbox took to the pulpit whenever she was able, and died in 1999. In her abbreviated two years in Cohasset Tarbox earned the deep love and respect of her congregation and her South Shore colleagues.

After a second search process spanning another year, First Parish unanimously and enthusiastically called the Justice to bring her ministry to Cohasset. Justice has a strong background in religious education for children and adults, and she delivers thought-provoking and inspirational sermons.

The church is also in the midst of planning an extensive renovation of its parish house after a complete re-building of the belfry atop its meeting house on the common.

Justice is now the second woman minister to be called to the church and only the 17th minister since the church was founded in 1713.

Russian organist at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now in its 10th year, St. Stephen's Church presents Russian organist, Tatiana Tchausova in a recital on Sunday, Oct. 29, at 1 p.m. Tchausova was born in the city of Dnepropetrovsk, a large cultural center in the Ukraine. She is now a professor at the St. Petersburg Conservatory, specializing in organ and musicology, and combines teaching and performing, having performed in Russia, the Baltic countries, Finland, and France.

Included in this concert will be selections of Russian organ music, as well as music of Cesar Franck, on whom Tchausova has done extensive research and dissertation work. This visit is particularly meaningful for St. Stephen's, since through the years, the church's music director, Dr. Fred Guzasky, has gone to St. Petersburg to teach at the conservatory and play recitals; and now, Tchausova, long-time colleague and friend, is coming to the Boston area for a series of recitals, including one at St. Pauls' Cathedral downtown. She is also planning an organ workshop and will be speaking about musical life in Russia. Call the information number concerning these important events.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. with parking available at the village lot near the church and is handicap accessible. Donations will be accepted, and a reception will follow the program For more information, call (781) 383-1083.

Other voices

The Rev. Zina Jacque is the second speaker for The Glastonbury Series "Listening to Other Voices' the Way of Prayer in Our Religious Traditions."

The topic is P.U.S.H. — Pray Until Something Happens, Thursday, Nov. 9, at 7:15 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey, Hingham.

The talk is sponsored by The Benedictine community of Glastonbury Abbey, Hingham.

The Rev. Zina Jacque is associate pastor and interim director of Christian Education for the First Baptist Church Melrose, in Melrose. In addition to serving in the financial aid offices of four leading colleges and universities, Jacque was also executive director of Tenpoint, a coalition of Boston area churches interested in reaching out to Boston's at-risk youth. Jacque brings broad pastoral experience in her American Baptist tradition where she has developed and implemented interfaith and cultural diversity programs.

In addition to the African-American tradition of prayer, The Glastonbury Series has already presented prayer in the Greek Orthodox tradition of icons, and in the future will be featuring Muslim, Jewish, Islamic and Celtic prayer traditions. This year the series will end with an evening of conversation on 12-Step Spirituality as an Inspired Tradition.

School board wants MCAS grad requirement postponed

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If the Cohasset School Committee has its way then the requirement to pass the MCAS —the state's high stakes tests — in order to graduate from high school will be postponed.

School board chairman Pat Martin and member Charlis Langmaid will take that message to the floor of the Massachusetts Association of School Committees Convention Nov. 1 in Worcester where they will be in like-minded company.

For the first time this year, 10th graders must pass MCAS in order to graduate in 2003.

Other school districts on the South Shore, including Hingham, and many across the state are lining up behind the resolution sponsored by the Arlington School Committee asking the state to suspend making MCAS a requirement for graduation.

For the first time this year, 10th graders must pass MCAS in order to graduate in 2003.

The resolution — which, if passed, will set the stage for a lobbying effort on Beacon Hill to change MCAS — asks that the MCAS graduation requirement be suspended until the following issues are addressed:

1. The need to develop a variety of assessment instruments (as described in the 1993 Education Reform Act) so that all students are evaluated fairly.
2. The need to develop additional criteria, so that no single test will determine the fate of a student or the value of a school system.
3. The length of the test and the time it takes away from teaching and learning.
4. The effect on students of the use of the test as graduation requirement (including but not limited to special vocational, education and bilingual students).

Supt. Edward Malvey explained the purpose behind MCAS, which stands for Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System, is to have students across the state matched up with similar programs. But, he explained, if someone slips up on one test, he or she might not get a high school diploma. The Class of 2003 (current 10th graders) will be the first class required to pass the language arts and math sections of MCAS exam in order to graduate.

Malvey explained that the curriculum frameworks — what a child is supposed to be taught in a particular grade — are driving the testing and are not in sync. He expects in three to four years, school districts would be teaching from "the same page" and the tests would be more accurate.

Missing Chelsea man found near Deer Hill School

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset police, responding to a report of an unconscious person on the wall by the Deer Hill School on Sohier Street at 10:10 a.m. Monday, found a 28-year old Chelsea man that had been reported missing since Saturday.

The man, Fred DeSimone, who police said has a history of various physical and mental illnesses, was found resting after walking to Cohasset from the Red Line train station in Braintree, according to a report filed by Officer Christy Tarantino.

Tarantino said he was waved down by motorist on Route 3A Monday morning and told of a man "passed out" on the wall. Upon arrival, Tarantino found DeSimone on his back, conscious. "Mr. DeSimone then said he was resting because his feet hurt," Tarantino reported.

With help from officer Garrett Hunt, Tarantino talked DeSimone into coming back to the police station with him. A query discovered that DeSimone had been reported as a missing person with the Chelsea police department since Saturday.

After an initial check by Cohasset paramedics, and Chelsea police were notified, DeSimone was transported to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Police chief Brain Noonan said despite the unusual circumstances, and the sensitive location where he was found, DeSimone never posed a threat to Deer Hill students or the community.

"He seemed quite harmless," he said. "He seemed to be pretty much within himself...rather normal."

Museum exhibits seek to grab a new audience

City Lights

By Josh B. Wardrop
CNC ARTS WRITER

Ask the average young, suburban male what he's got planned for a pleasant autumn afternoon, and the answers are predictable. Maybe a day of yard-work, or an afternoon of nachos and beer in front of the TV. How about a day strolling through some of the city's finer art museums?

Museums?

Admittedly, museum patrons traditionally tend to skew rather dramatically toward certain age groups and, in large part, toward the female gender. However, a pair of new exhibits opening in the coming weeks at the Museum of Fine Arts and Institute of Contemporary Art offer an opportunity to break that mold.

First up is the "Customized: Art Inspired by Hot Rods, Low Riders and American Car Culture," opening Oct. 25 at the Institute of Contemporary Art. Organized by Nora Donnelly, assistant curator at the Institute, the show features paintings, installations, sculpture, poster art and photography by 14 artists which explore a fascination with the form, function and societal mystique that surrounds the American hotrod racing car and its modern-day successor, the customized hydraulic low-rider.

That will be followed at the Museum of Fine Arts with a show conceived by Darcy Kuronen, curator of musical instruments to increase the visibility of the MFA's permanent music collection of nearly 1,200 pieces.

"It occurred to me," says Kuronen, "why not survey the changing design of guitars over the last 400 years?"

According to Donnelly, the idea for "Customized" was born about 18 months ago shortly after she had relocated to the East Coast.

"I had traveled around Maine, Massachusetts and other states and was struck by the idea that working on one's car has become a perfectly acceptable outlet for expressing creativity."

From there, an enthusiasm for fast cars combined with a desire to introduce more diverse types of artwork into mainstream museum culture to become "Customized."

"The idea was to include mediums, technologies and artists not traditionally accepted as art forms," says Donnelly. "Combining 'high' and 'low' art, as it were. Bringing in techniques like graffiti art, and something like airbrushing, which is never shown. I was interested in putting together something that wasn't usually seen in museums — something almost more like a car show."

For Kuronen, who began the groundwork for her show two years ago, the issue also came down to a fresh perspective. "To the

Condos are still a good value

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

If you're looking to break into the real estate market and haven't thought of condominiums because you don't think they're a good investment, think again, real estate experts say. But don't expect to find one right away.

"They're becoming very scarce," said Tracy Sayce of Jack Conway Realty in Hanson.

"When condos were first built, they were very expensive and hard to get, but then there was a saturation a few years ago. Now they're very much in demand and becoming more and more rare on the market," said Sayce, whose office has only two current condominium listings.

One is a townhouse with two bedrooms at Albert C. Reed Estates on High Street in Hanson, listed at $186,000. The other listing, also a townhouse, is for a two-bedroom unit at Cranberry Hill on Winter Street in Hanson. That unit is priced at $159,900.

"They're selling very quickly. We have a waiting list of people we call when a condo comes on the market," said Sayce.

Condominiums are a good value now because of the high demand.

Joan Williams of Jack Conway Realty

At Century 21 Annex Realty in Quincy, broker Mary Collins said her office had only one available condominium listing, a studio at Edgewater Place, with 505 square-feet, listed at $89,900. Collins said condos in her office typically go under agreement almost as soon as they go on the market.

"I wish we had more to offer, but they just aren't out there," said Collins.

Collins and other real estate professionals on the South Shore say there are a lot of reasons for the shortage in the condominium market: high prices for starter homes, an upswing in the number of single people buying real estate, the availability of mortgage programs, and the climbing prices in rentals.

"Rentals are becoming so high-priced that sometimes it is actually more affordable to have a mortgage, if they can come up with the down payment. And there are so many programs out there now, a lot of people can swing it," said Collins.

According to Joan Williams of Jack Conway Realty's Pembroke office, condominiums are a good value now because of the high demand.

"They have kept up in appreciation. They may have had a few years where they didn't do well, but as a long-term investment, they have done well," said Williams. "There are certain people who will always choose a condo over a single family home, no matter what the market is doing, and that's why they retain their value over time," she said.

Empty-nesters, first-time homebuyers and singles are all groups that are always interested in condos. If a condominium has a unique location — such as waterfront or near a train station — add boaters and commuters to the list of interested buyers.

Helena Waters recently purchased a condominium in Weymouth, shortly after starting a new job in Boston. "I knew I wanted a condo right away. I would have no time for a yard, or repairs to a house," said Waters, who is single and works sometimes 12-hour days. Waters had been paying more than $1,000 a month to rent a small apartment just outside of Boston, and said she pays only a little more a month for her mortgage on a two-bedroom unit near the bus line.

"I think my parents were worried that I wasn't making a good investment, because they remember the condo glut

Salsa Verde

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Salsa verde, or "green sauce," is simple enough. It's usually made with parsley, capers, vinegar, anchovies, garlic, and olive oil. The problem with this recipe is achieving the proper marriage of flavors. Having tried a half dozen recipes from Marcella Hazan, Patricia Wells, Penelope Casas and others, I found that salsa verde can be a rough customer indeed, reeking of garlic and anchovies with a strong sour undertone to boot. My goal was to find the perfect marriage of flavors, toning down the brutish high notes while delivering a good jolt of flavor.

I started with the ingredients above and then tried a series of additions. I liked capers — they added a nice briny undercurrent — but mustard, a common ingredient in many salsa verde recipes, was often overpowering if used is large quantities. Onions, fish stock, and white wine did nothing for the flavor and a thickened sauce, using flour as a thickener, was also a dud. It lacked the bright flavors and fresh taste of a good green sauce.

The recipe I liked the best was from Biba Caggiano's Trattoria Cooking. First I reduced the garlic to 1 medium clove since I felt that the sauce had too much bite. For the same reason, I reduced the anchovy fillets from four to two. The fishy taste was gone and what remained was a pleasant hint of anchovy. The best part of this recipe was the use of good quality bread which bound the ingredients together and which also made the mixture less harsh. I found that 3/4 cup of firm or day old bakery or European style white bread to be best. I removed the crust and cut it into cubes for best results. To soften it, an important step, I simply added the bread, oil and vinegar to the food processor bowl and let the bread sit in the liquid for a couple of minutes before adding the balance of the ingredients and blending.

Next I played around with lemon juice and vinegar. I preferred red wine vinegar or white balsamic vinegar to either lemon juice (too sweet) or white wine vinegar (too harsh). I tried substituting cornichons for capers but found that the flavor was too sour. I also needed to add salt, about 1/8 teaspoon and a few grinds of fresh pepper.

THE BEST SALSA VERDE

Use this sauce to accompany meat, chicken, or fish.

1/2 cup best quality olive oil

2 tablespoons red wine or white balsamic vinegar

3/4 cup day old or firm bakery style white bread, crusts removed and broken into 1-inch pieces

2 tablespoons capers, drained well

1 medium clove garlic, peeled and coarsely chopped

2 cups Italian flat parsley leaves, coarsely chopped loosely packed

2 anchovy fillets, coarsely chopped.

1 teaspoon Dijon mustard

1/8 teaspoon salt or to taste and freshly ground black pepper

Add the oil and vinegar to the bowl of a food processor. Place the bread in the bowl, letting it sit for 5 minutes in the puddles of oil/vinegar and not on top of the blade. Add the remaining ingredients and process for about 40 seconds or until the mixture is finely chopped and homogenous, stopping to scrape the sides of the bowl if necessary. Serve immediately or refrigerate for up to 2 days. Makes about 1 cup-enough to accompany 6 to 8 servings of beef, chicken or fish.

Chile's changing image

By Al Stankus
CNC CORRESPONDENT

Because bargain hunters were first attracted to Chilean wines, I think I can safely say that a more forgiving segment of the market knows the wines from Chile. Part of this damning with faint praise means there's a legion of Chilean wine fans who've been somewhat numbed into purchasing often inferior wines with recognizable (to them) labels. Their mantra will always be, "This stuff is pretty good for $7 a bottle."

With democracy in place and foreign (mainly French and American) money, new equipment and much expertise being imported, Chile's wine industry has, in recent times, taken a step into a new arena.

First it was premium wines made by established Chilean winemakers like Concha y Toro with its Don Melchor Reserve wines and the Finis-Terrae reserve label from the estimable Cousiño-Macul. Priced in the then high teens, they took dead aim at upper middle class California Cabernet.

But these ventures were but table setters for what's taking place today. Chile has gone beyond the "reserve label" and more than half a dozen complex, finely crafted, true powerhouse red wines are being sold in America for $25 to $65 a bottle. This recent influx of luxe wines begs the inevitable question: Can these winemakers in Chile make high-end wines that will compete with the world's best red wines?

Based on two wines that I recently tasted, one from a long-lived Chilean winery, Montes, and the other from Casa Lapostolle, a French-owned winery of impeccable pedigree, the answer is "Yes."

The Montes Alpha "M" 1997 ($68) is a Bordeaux blend made of 80 percent Cabernet Sauvignon, 10 percent Merlot and 10 percent Cabernet Franc. It's a very big, cedar-scented wine with that classic mint-eucalyptus cabernet nose and mouth. It's also very intensely chocolate flavored with big tannins.

Casa Lapostolle's Clos Apalta 1997 ($48) is more opulent with a deep dark India ink color and a black cherry bouquet and a mouth that follows from its nose.

Made from 50-60 year old vines and with only 5 percent Cabernet in the blend (the rest is Merlot and Carmenere, an indigenous Chilean grape often called Chilean Merlot), the winemaker made only about 2,000 cases of this beauty that has layers of textures, the most notable of which is silk. With minimal hunting, both can be found in the Boston area.

However, for the non-trophy collectors among you, this newly centered Chilean focus on the super premium begs another question, "Whither the fate of the wines that made Chile famous?"

In many ways, it's a lot like gentrification. One area skyrockets while those neighborhoods that hang on the periphery all of a sudden start to perk up. In short, a number of better-made, still fairly priced Chilean wines have moved into the American market. Of course the weedy tasting $5-7 a bottle stuff is still there, but kind of like Clint Eastwood, for a few dollars a more, better things happen.

Here are some Chilean favorites:

Cuvée Alexandre Merlot Casa Lapostolle 1996/1997 ($23) So much better than any California Merlot in this price range, each of these vintages shows loads of big, juicy, sweet fruit and a rich mouth. It's lush from start to finish and manages to be viscous without being cloying.

Montes "Reserve" Malbec 1999 ($10) From a grape that's more associated with Argentina, this Chilean Malbec is heady with a licorice nose and even some mint undertones. It's quite juicy and the abundant fruit does seem to take over for the tannins. But then the inherently good body appears in what's essentially a wine where you may not want tannin to interfere. There's a bit of acid, so you could have it with a pizza. The first '99 wine from Chile that I've tasted, if this is an indication, it appears to be a much better vintage than 1998.

Dallas Conte Cabernet 1997/1998 ($10) There's still some of the 1997 lingering on shelves, so run in and buy it now. The low yields of the 1997 Chilean vintage produced small fruit with intense flavors so this is like ripe raspberry jam in a bottle. There's enough slightly sweet tannin to make your mouth dance and wiggle so you could actually hold it for a year or two- but heck, it's pretty good right now. The 1998 is good but '97 is better.

Casa Lapostolle Sauvignon Blanc 1998 ($9) The lone white wine representative, I find most Chilean Chardonnay to be overly ripe tasting with little or no acid. And most of its Sauvignon Blanc is lifeless. However, this one is a full-throttle rapier with some nice melon mouth and a clean finish. It even manages to linger at the end. A real best buy kind of wine.

A 'new world' of theater

East Bridgewater native brings dramatic group home

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Jim Sullivan loves to entertain people. That's why he decided to start a brand new theater company in his hometown of East Bridgewater.

Sullivan who now lives in Quincy, held a kickoff party last weekend at the East Bridgewater Commercial Club to celebrate the launching of his new drama group, The New World Theatre Company.

"We have a couple of goals as a theater group," Sullivan said. "We want to produce some great quality theater and provide an opportunity for all ages to come and get some hands-on experience in the performance field. But we also want to keep a very strong connection with our community—we want to give back to the community that supports us."

Sullivan said he and members of the new theater group will often be participating in East Bridgewater-based events.

"In some cases, we plan on participating in local events, and in some cases we plan on making donations," he said. We want to build relationships because we are a very grassroots organization."

But when it comes down to it, Sullivan said great performances are at the heart of The New World Theatre Company's goals.

Sullivan said he doesn't have an actual building for the theater group to use as a permanent home base yet, but he said he'll be using stages in both the East Bridgewater High School, and the junior high school for now.

"My office is in my home right now," Sullivan said, "but we'll be looking to get some space in East Bridgewater at some point in the future. We'll be looking at a variety of spaces."

Sullivan is also brainstorming as to what shows he'd like to put on for the public. He said he thoroughly enjoys plays like "The Music Man" and "Our Town," and he also relishes the challenge of staging any work of Shakespeare's. He also noted he would love to put some time into working on children's shows and comedies.

"I'm also totally into the idea of putting on original productions," he added.

All this may seem like a lot of work, but Sullivan is no stranger to theater work. When he graduated from Emerson College in 1994, he immediately started working with local groups like the North River Community Theater and also Norwell's Company Theatre. He also began acting in and directing various shows in Boston with different theater groups.

"When I graduated, I knew I wasn't going to go to New York, so I became really involved around this area," he said."

Members of the New World Theatre Company ham it up as part of the new dramatic group's celebration and fundraiser.

PHOTOS/FRED ROBERTSON

New World Theatre founder Jim Sullivan and the Human Heart Revue perform at the Commercial Club in East Bridgewater.

In 1996, Sullivan's talents took him to a theater group in Newburyport where he served on the board of directors and even directed a few shows. But by last June, the commute from the South Shore to the North Shore wore thin.

"Newburyport was just too far from home for me," he said. "And in June, I formulated an idea to start a theater group in my home town. I presented the idea to a group of my friends, and they liked it—those people are now on my board of directors. This whole thing was not only my vision. It was a collaboration of ideas between me and them."

Sullivan said he himself is a member of the group's board of directors but he said he will also serve as the organization's executive director, and he will be directing some of the shows.

"I want to give other people out there opportunities to do some directing or some acting," he said. "I'm not going to be directing all the shows. One of my main goals is to allow actors and directors to hone their skills.

"We have a couple of goals as a theater group. We want to produce some great quality theater and provide an opportunity for all ages to come and get some hands-on experience in the performance field. But we also want to keep a very strong connection with our community—we want to give back to the community that supports us."

New World Theatre Company founder Jim Sullivan

And he said while he's now out on his own, Sullivan wants to continue working and communicating with the other local theaters around the area.

"I think it's important to communicate with the other local theaters," he said.

But right now, Sullivan said the next few weeks will just be spent on getting The New World Theatre Company off the ground.

"We've heard some great responses from the community so far," he said. "And I think it's going to be a lot of fun. Whether we put on a spectacle or something minimal, if the audience connects with it, we'll know it's successful."

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 25

Take advantage of calm influences in a stormy astrological period. Today's planetary patterns urge you to take extra time out for yourself. Enjoy a leisurely lunch with a friend or colleague; get back in the swing of favorite sports, hobbies. The Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Jupiter, Pluto and Uranus until it becomes inactive at 9:03 p.m. All sales and promotion campaigns get the green light. Overall, people will be friendly and cooperative.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 26

Lots of planetary activity makes for a topsy-turvy day. The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect. Stay upbeat and don't allow anything or anyone to throw you off course. Avoid making important decisions, signing contracts or starting new activities. This is a time for finishing projects already begun, cleaning out, letting go. The planet Uranus turns direct at 11:23 a.m., 17-degrees of Aquarius. Expect the unexpected. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Neptune can blur the lines between fact and fiction. The Libra moon is inactive until 8:23 p.m., when it enters Scorpio. Meditate for inner peace.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27

At 3:58 a.m., the sun and moon come together at 4-degrees of Scorpio. Generally the light side of a new moon brings a favorable time for launching important ventures. Because Mercury travels in retrograde motion at this time, it is best to postpone signing contracts or starting important projects. On the other hand, influences are prime for new beginnings on an inner, spiritual level. Open your heart to higher visions. Focus on programs or disciplines that will help you to break bad habits and make significant improvements in your personal life. The planet Venus plays an important role in current planetary trends. Today Venus opposes Jupiter; tomorrow Venus aligns with Pluto.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28

Today's planetary influences are similar to yesterday's. The moon continues to travel in serious Scorpio. Venus joins Pluto at 11-degrees of Sagittarius, 11:31 a.m. This combination may bring up powerful issues, deep feelings and buried emotions. See it as an opportunity to eliminate negativity in your relationships. Forgive and forget past grievances; clear the decks and start anew.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 29

At 1:04 a.m. the Scorpio moon opposes Saturn and becomes inactive. Relief arrives at 2:40 a.m., when the moon enters lighthearted Sagittarius. This is a wonderful day to kick back, relax and unwind. Put career or domestic worries on the back burner. Be more spontaneous, adventurous. Overall, people will be energetic, optimistic, sociable. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Neptune in the morning and Jupiter in the evening. Retrograde Mercury aligns with the sun at 9:09 p.m. This influence may shed new light on situations that have been troubling you.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 30

A Sagittarius moon continues to generate an upbeat mood. On the other hand, people may be careless and easily distracted from practical projects. Pay extra attention to details, so that you don't overlook something important. Slow down. Don't be too hasty in your judgments or too keen to commit yourself. This day is best for vacationing, relaxing and enjoying favorite leisure activities.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 31

A challenging lunar alignment to Mars affects this morning. Avoid taking chances or doing anything risky. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 8:43 a.m. until 1:01 p.m., when it enters Capricorn. An applying alignment of Mercury and Neptune plays an important role in today's planetary picture. Don't take anything or anyone too seriously. This is not a time to make important decisions, sign contracts or start new ventures. However, current influences are ideal for fun and games. Put on your party hat and let the good times roll.

"I had very poor vision - 20/400. My eye doctor labeled me a 'hard core' contact lens wearer. But I wore them all the time, never took them out. I developed eye infections and irritations. So I decided LASIK surgery was my best option."

"At Post & O'Connor Eye Centers, they prepared me very well for the procedure. They told me virtually everything that was going to happen. As a result, I wasn't nervous at all. I had no fear. Everybody from the doctors on down was perfectly kind. It all went very smoothly."

"Now my vision is very good. In fact, my husband no longer fears driving with me at night. Instead of watching the road, he has time to study while I drive."

The manly arts

best of my knowledge, there's never been an exhibition of this size at an art museum, where guitars aren't dealt with just as instruments but in terms of visual arts."

So, Kuronen bought a bunch of guitar books and hit the road, crisscrossing the country to meet with museums and collectors, until he had secured the use of the more than 110 guitars featured in "Dangerous Curves: The Art of the Guitar," appearing at the MFA from Nov. 5 through Feb. 25, 2001. The exhibit includes everything from one of the oldest surviving guitars (a Belchior Diaz baroque piece from 1590) right up to modern custom pieces owned by stars such as Prince, J. Geils and Jimi Hendrix.

Neither curator seemed to have much problem recruiting artists for their shows. Donnelly was already familiar with many of the artists featured in "Customized," such as poster artist Coop, photographer Alex Harris and former Zap Comix illustrator Robert Williams. Others she learned about from research, such as photographer Craig McDean, who donated excerpts from his series "I Love Fast Cars." And, as word of the exhibit spread throughout the close-knit hotrod community, local artists came forward. Graffiti artist Jimmy V produced a 32-foot mural which Donnelly describes as having "a definite visual impact, with a distinct hot-rod twist."

While Kuronen expects that people will be most excited by some of the pieces associated with famous rock stars such as Steve Howe of Yes (who donated both an early 19th century piece from his private collection, as well as a prototype digital guitar) and John Lennon (Lennon's very first guitar was acquired from a private collector in New York City), Kuronen himself is knocked out by the rare, older guitars of earlier centuries that have been contributed by other museums. "We sought a lot of variety, pieces where people tried to push the envelope. And, the pieces we have demonstrate that innovations and customization in guitars go all the way back."

Both exhibits will features special augmentations that lift the shows above just a bunch of pieces hanging on walls. Donnelly is particularly proud of the installation "Hot Rod Girls HQ" by Sylvie Fleury, which is built to resemble a garage, and which guests will be able to walk through.

And the "Dangerous Curves" exhibit offers a 45-minute audio guide that accompanies the exhibit, narrated by local boy James Taylor. "He embraced the project right away," says Kuronen. "In addition to the narration, he also plays about 10 or 11 of the more oddball guitars so visitors can hear what they sound like."

What seems to unite both exhibits, though, beyond the fact that they push the envelope of the "conventional" museum art exhibit, is that the two shows seem to be geared toward attracting a new demographic. After all, short of a comprehensive viewing of classic beer stein designs down through the ages, what could be a more male-centered subject for artistic exhibition than fast cars and electric guitars? From the perspective of a member of the one gender that truly regards "Dogs Playing Poker" as a creative vision, it seems that the museums are actively courting myself and my fellow brethren who may be babes in the artistic woods.

Donnelly, for example, is perfectly clear about who she expects to attend the show.

"Absolutely. I expect a heavily concentrated male audience... because it's going to appeal to car enthusiasts. I've already seen the excitement and felt the response from the hotrod community. Car fans are incredibly psyched up for the whole thing. It certainly wasn't the sole reason for doing the exhibit, but it is definitely a great opportunity to get a new audience through the doors."

Kuronen agrees: "It was not part of the thinking (at the MFA) to specifically try and attract men, but it wasn't long after we devised the exhibit that we realized it would draw a new kind of audience. After all, this isn't a typical museum show.

"Once that occurred to us, we said, 'Let's embrace this. Let's get men into the museum, and then maybe get them turned on to other kinds of art as well.' We're all used to men usually being at the Red Sox or Celtics game... but if we can increase awareness of the visual world, that's a great thing." Reflecting on the primal urge that exists in men when surrounding by that most iconic of all musical instruments, Kuronen adds, "Make no mistake. There'll be so much air guitar."

Luckily, since the exhibits are each in town for several months, there should be no problem with two museums concurrently running shows catering to the same audience. And make no mistake, the curators expect a good degree of crossover. Donnelly remarks, "I've already heard, from some of the artists coming into town for our show, that they can't wait to check out the guitars at MFA."

"Customized: Art Inspired by Hot Rods, Low Riders and American Car Culture," opens Oct. 25, at the Institute of Contemporary Art, 955 Boylston St., and runs through Dec. 31. Call (617) 266-5152 for more information.

"Dangerous Curves: The Art of the Guitar," opens Nov. 5, at the Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., and runs through Feb. 25, 2001. Call (617) 267-9300 for more information.

Paintings like "Lucky, 2000" may help attract a male audience to the Institute of Contemporary Art.

The giving spirit

local events. She's also the president of her school's chapter of Amnesty International.

Her connection to the International group that works to protect human rights led Harvester to organize a school-wide fast in tribute of American political prisoner Lori Berenson.

"I just feel it's my responsibility to help people out. I know I'm capable of doing things, so that's what I do. I give of myself what I can give. That's why we're all on this planet."

Norwell High School senior Hannah Harvester

Hannah Harvester

Berenson is currently being held captive in Peru on charges that she was a member of local terrorist groups (in Peru) but she is currently awaiting a new trial. She has been in prison for the past five years. Last year, on the anniversary of her imprisonment, Berenson fasted to recognize the day.

Harvester made sure students and faculty at Norwell High School fasted with her.

In addition to being politically active and socially aware, Harvester is an avid artist, a trombone player and she is an award winning actress — She received an acting award a year ago for her performance in a Tennessee Williams play her school performed in a drama festival.

"Hannah is hands down one of the most gifted people who ever went through the drama program at Norwell High," said Harvester's former drama coach, ElizaBeth Cloutier Elliott. "She would always put on arresting performances in that she demanded the audience's attention. Her leadership skills are excellent as well— she would always be the first to help out a new member of the drama club. She's got a really tender heart and she's aware of people's needs. I swear she gets up every morning and says 'who can I help today?'"

"Hannah is a beloved Sunday school teacher," said her father Stephen, who is the minister at Church Hill United Methodist. "I feel Hannah has really gotten the spirit of the gospel, and I know she's a passionate and committed leader."

"She brings such passion and emotion to the stage, and that requires a lot of courage. She's not afraid to show people her real soul."

Hannah's mom Judith agrees.

"Hannah is a very compassionate young person," said Judith. "She's the type of person that if she sees something in the world that bothers her, she wants to do something about it. She's also a very creative person, and she's an excellent speaker. If she's got something to say, she'll say it. She has a way of making bridges to people."

"As soon as I saw the call for entries in the Spirit of Community contest (in The Mariner), I knew immediately that Hannah would be a perfect nominee," Smith said. "I have such respect and admiration for her. She's inspiring to little children, middle school children, and grown ups. She's just a real inspiring person. She's just delightful."

For Harvester, giving to others is a way of life and always has been.

"I just feel it's my responsibility to help people out," she said. "I know I'm capable of doing things, so that's what I do. I give of myself what I can give. That's why we're all on this planet."

And Harvester's good works aren't going unnoticed. After learning about her crusade in her behalf, Lori Berenson began corresponding with Harvester.

"(Berenson) sent us a card she made with thread," Harvester said. "She is an extremely non-violent person, and I believe in her."

Another influential and inspirational person that has touched Harvester's life is Sister Helen Prejean, author of "Dead Man Walking," her autobiographical account of counseling a prison inmate death row.

And for Harvester, beauty and inspiration is everywhere.

"I'm inspired by beauty and what s around me," she said. "And I'm inspired by people who are self-less and non-materialistic."

"She just embodies the spirit of volunteerism and community service. She's also very dedicated to children. I just see her as a tremendous role model for younger children in the community."

Joy Smith

As she plans to apply to college, Harvester said she hasn't nailed down what she wants to do with the rest of her life, but rest assured helping others and giving back to her community will be part of her plans.

"I don't know what I want to do yet," she said. "I might want to teach or I might want to be an actress. I'm not sure. I'm really into things like English literature, archaeology, and the environment."

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Prime Real Estate

Pristine pond-front

This spacious Colonial home exemplifies the marriage of a nature-lover's rare pond-front setting and the ease and friendship of a premier subdivision setting. Set on a two-acre lot including frontage on a quiet pond, this home offers more than a great floor plan. Relax in the screened gazebo and take in the ever-changing New England landscape and elusive waterfowl or paddle your canoe across the silent water.

Built in 1983 this quality home offers four bedrooms, two and one-half baths and a unique 3,500-square-foot open floor plan with dramatic two-story foyer and turned staircase. A first-floor library/office has French doors and built-in bookcases. The large living and dining rooms will accommodate your holiday gatherings with ease.

The 24-foot kitchen has ample custom maple cabinetry, built-in island and desk and peaceful pond views. The large eating area has a double atrium door leading out to a triple-tiered deck and screened gazebo overlooking the pond. The 22-foot family room features a fireplace, cathedral ceilings and convenient rear staircase to the upper level.

Double doors open to the inviting master suite with a separate sitting area. You'll want to linger with the Sunday paper in this comfortable and private room. The 22-foot-by-10-foot walk-in closet offers organization and convenience to the most demanding storage needs. The luxurious master bathroom boasts an oversized Jacuzzi tub, double sinks and separate shower stall.

This rare pond-front offering rests on a beautiful two-acre level and treed lot in Green Island Landing subdivision close to area beaches, shopping and country club.

Homestead Protection increase effective in November

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

BACKGROUND

The Term "Homestead" finds its origin on the western frontier of 19th century America. A "Homesteader" a/k/a/ a "Sooner" was a person who settled on land in the western United States before the land was officially made available in order to have first choice of location. In many ways, a Homestead was much more than a home. Homesteaders often risked their lives as they clung on in the wilderness, battling nature, solitude, and Indians. And so, a Homestead soon acquired the mantle of something sacred, special and worthy of unique treatment under the law. It became the place where our concept of family values was born.

THE NEW STATUTE

Whether you know it or not, as a Massachusetts homeowner, you are entitled to protect $300,000 or more worth of your home equity from most creditors. Effective Nov. 2, 2000, the amount of protection covered by a Declaration of Homestead covering your principal residence has been increased. The regular Homestead goes up from $100,000 to $300,000, and the elderly or disabled Homestead increases from $200,000 per person to $300,000 per person. The following are typical questions and answers.

Q. What is Homestead Protection?

A. The Homestead shields a portion of equity from seizure by most creditors.

Q. How much equity is shielded?

A. Effective November 2, 2000 the regular Homestead Protection is $300,000.

A. If you are Elderly or Disabled, each owner is entitled to $300,000 protection. (example) If there are two elderly owners, they enjoy a total of $600,000 of protection.

Q. What age qualifies for the elderly Homestead Protection?

A. You must be at least 62 years old.

Q. What qualifies for Disability Homestead Protection?

A. Anyone with a Social Security Disability Letter or letter from a physician.

Q. How do you obtain Homestead Protection?

A. Recording a properly drafted and signed Declaration of Homestead at the Registry of Deeds for the County in which your home is located.

A. To acquire disability protection, the Homeowner must record a disability letter with the Declaration of Homestead.

Q. If Title to your home is in a nominee trust, can you acquire a Homestead?

A. No!

Q. If both homeowners are elderly or disabled, what is the amount of protection?

A. $300,000 for each owner, or a total of $600,000 for two owners.

Q. If you already have a Declaration of Homestead on record, with the $100,000 protection, do you need to do anything to achieve $300,000 coverage?

A. No. The amount of coverage is automatically increased to $300,000.

Q. Does a Homestead shield against all creditors?

A. No, Homestead will not protect against:

- Debts contracted prior to Homestead filing.
- Debts contracted in connection with purchase of the house.
- Order for child and/or spousal support.
- Taxes
- Judgment based upon fraud, mistake, duress, or lack of capacity

LEGAL ADVICE

Every homeowner should unqualifiedly record a Declaration of Homestead. The cost is minimal and there is no stigma attached. "Massachusetts recognizes the value of securing to householders a home for the family regardless of the Householder's financial condition." Dwyer v. Cempellin, 424 Massachusetts.

Is your home healthy?

Health House Rx offers free checklist

Castle or cottage, city or country, home is your sanctuary.

It's a place to raise a family, entertain friends, live and more often these days, work.

Americans spend 90 percent of their time indoors and 65 percent of their time at home, in what is usually viewed as a safe haven.

However, growing evidence suggests that some homes may be detrimental to the health of their occupants, especially those with compromised lung function due to age, asthma, chemical sensitivities or other respiratory conditions.

Asthma rates in particular are increasing at an alarming rate. Self-reported asthma rates increased 75 percent from 1980 to 1994. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), asthma affected 17.3 million individuals in the United States and is the most common chronic illness among children.

Home pollutants such as dust mites, animal related allergens (dander and saliva) and mold are known asthma triggers, while high accumulations of carbon monoxide, formaldehyde, and radon in inadequately ventilated homes are serious health hazards. The media regularly report on families experiencing deteriorating health due to the presence of mold in their tightly-sealed houses.

The new "Health House Rx Home Checklist" is a tool to help you determine if potentially unhealthy conditions exist in your homes.

Health House Rx helps consumers address this growing national problem. The new "Health House Rx Home Checklist" is a tool to help you determine if potentially unhealthy conditions exist in your homes. Included are a series of questions that help assess what your home needs are and determine if evaluation is needed by a professional and basic steps that homeowners can take on their own to improve their environment.

Health House Rx, developed by the American Lung Association of Minnesota, provides education and training for consumers and builders to help raise the standard for home environments. Whether they are maintaining a home, remodeling, or building a new house, Health House Rx offers consumers the information they need to make their homes healthier.

of the eighties. But it isn't like that anymore," she said. "For me, it was the best way to go," said Waters.

Still, condominiums aren't for everyone. Potential buyers should carefully think about the cons that come along with the pros of condominium life: close quarters with neighbors, sharing decisions regarding repairs and upkeep and monthly payments to condo associations.

Waters, who belongs to the condominium association in her building, said there are some rules and regulations to consider.

"There are issues like parking, the decibel level in your home, keeping pets. These are things you wouldn't have to worry about if you owned a detached home. But you also don't have to worry about snow plowing in the winter and fixing the water heater yourself," she said.

Once you decide that a condominium is right for you, learn about the management of the building, townhouse or complex you're interested in, experts advise. In addition to mortgage payments, condo owners are responsible for monthly maintenance for garbage collection, landscaping and other upkeep, insurance and taxes.

"It's better to look at the cost overall, each month, adding the maintenance fees to the mortgage payments, to get an accurate idea of how much it's going to cost. Every place has different fees, so it's important to have that information," she said.

But even with the monthly costs, condominiums can be the most affordable alternative for some people, according to Collins.

"I think that as long as the real estate market continues like this, with prices going higher and higher, condos will be in demand," she said.

IN BRIEF

Hingham resident joins DeWolfe

The DeWolfe Company announced that Nancy McVay of Hingham has joined their team in Hingham. McVay, a resident of Hingham for 16 years, obtained her real estate license and is currently completing her training at DeWolfe's Career Foundations.

McVay lives with her husband Pat and son Brendan and is active in town activities, Hingham Mother's Club, board member of parent/teacher organization at Plymouth River School, board member of South Shore Country Club and co-chair of the Junior Golf Tournaments 1998-1999. She comes to the real estate field from a background in medical sales.

Main Street Marketplace debuts this fall

GlasCourt Properties, LLC, has announced the newest addition to the rejuvenation of downtown Plymouth, Main Street Marketplace, to open this fall in the old Puritan Clothing Company building at 58 Main St.

Main Street Marketplace will contain more than 75 individual retail spaces under one roof. GlasCourt Properties LLC is providing the opportunity for retailers to have a "storefront on Main Street" without the expensive overhead of an entire building, with on-site employees and management, for one, low all-inclusive price.

GlasCourt plans to take a very large building that has been a piece of Plymouth history and create affordable retail space as well as a venue to service the incredible demand for such space in downtown Plymouth. A diverse, unique and exciting mix of retail shops will add to the flavor of a special downtown.

The operation is similar to the workings of an antique mall where dealers' goods occupy a certain space, with one central checkout system and one set of employees handled by a management company. The sales force will take care of the sales at a central checkout and will even restock the leased space if the retailer wishes. All the retailer has to do is provide the sales team with the inventory and they do all the rest.

With the opening of Main Street Marketplace and the fact that many new shops have recently opened on Main Street, downtown Plymouth is the destination for holiday shopping. Many retailers have already reserved space, one of them being Plimoth Plantation. For more information about Main Street Marketplace call 508-747-8875.

Glorious autumn weather, boasting warm, sunny days, brisk evenings, and occasional soaking rains, has provided South Shore gardeners with the ideal conditions to prepare our landscapes for the colder days ahead. The fleeting fall foliage paints the landscape with bold, vibrant color, tumbling to the ground all too quickly to reveal the stark silhouettes of our trees and shrubs. Like the dying embers of a smoldering fire, the lingering carpet of multi-colored leaves creates a tapestry of fiery red, gold and orange against a background of green velvet.

Green thumbs up

The fall garden is not without its star performers, even in areas where chilly evenings have blackened the tender foliage of our colorful annuals. In the sunny border, cheerful daisies, in a wide array of colors, lift their faces to the warm afternoon sun. While many of our New England asters have faded, the tall, lavender-blue flowers of Aster tartaricus are just coming into full bloom, towering above the persistent pink blooms of the Bonica rose. Nearby, an architectural clump of Rudbeckia nitida, which resides adjacent to my front entry, continues to dazzle visitors with its green-centered, vibrant yellow daisies atop 7-foot stems. This carefree perennial has bloomed relentlessly since July and its stiff, slender stems will continue to offer interest through the winter months as birds visit its clusters of ripening, brown seedheads.

The giant, white daisies, reminiscent of our earlier-blooming Shasta daisies, belong to the Nippon daisy, also commonly known as Montauk daisy. A shrubby perennial which prefers well-drained soils in full sun, this stunning addition to the fall garden should be cut back nearly to the ground each spring to promote compact growth, otherwise, its handsome, leathery leaves may appear somewhat unattractively in clusters near the top of tall, woody stems.

More delicate in appearance, but rugged, nonetheless, the bountiful flowers of the truly hardy Korean chrysanthemums (Dendranthema grandiflorum) are welcome additions to the late sunny border. Commonly known as Sheffield daisies, although often difficult to find in the trade, they are available in pale pink, peach or white. These

We Salute Broker of the Month
Alice Bowker

Coldwell Banker Hunneman is once again honoring Alice Bowker as the top selling agent for the month of August. "Alice really listens to her customers, and then works hard to provide the services they are looking for. With her extensive knowledge of the business and the properties, she has a comforting way of guiding people through very stressful decisions. This has been another very successful year for Alice. She has already been awarded Coldwell Banker's President's Club designation for achieving the highest level of sales in 2000. And, in addition, Alice also became a member of Coldwell Banker's 2000 International Diamond Society, recognizing outstanding service." commented Erica Ford, Scituate Office Manager.

For exceptional service and exceptional results, call Alice at 781-545-4900.

New Releases

BEDAZZLED (PG-13) Now this is what a remake should be — it captures the spirit of the (1967) original but also has lots of new things to offer. Brendan Fraser is the loser pining away for co-worker Frances O'Connor. He's given the chance to get her via seven wishes granted by Elizabeth Hurley as the devil, herself, in return for his soul. Riotously funny situations, charmingly old-fashioned special effects, and Liz looks great in red. (E.S.) A-

GOYA IN BORDEAUX (R) An impression, by Carlos Saura, of what the 19th-century Spanish painter might have thought during his exile in France in his last year. With flashbacks to his glory days as the court painter, and tableaux about the wars ravaging Spain and France during his lifetime, the film is impressively suggestive. (D.B.) B-

HUMAN RESOURCES (PG-13) A young French business school graduate gets an internship at a factory in his hometown, finding that his bosses are duplicitous, the union leaders are ideological zealots and his father is stuck in the mud. Result: a major strike and some jolting revelations. You may leave singing "The Internationale." (D.B.) B-

THE LADIES MAN (R) The fitfully amusing "Saturday Night Live" skit stretches into 90 minutes, though it seems endless. The title character (a lisping Tim Meadows) gets in dutch with dozens of men (led by SNL colleague Will Ferrell) whose wives he has, um, pleasured; they chase him. Stereotypes of gays and blacks prevail. More tedious than raunchy. (D.B.) D

LOST SOULS (R) The anti-Christ, or the devil, or somesuch, is coming, and semi-psychic Maya (Winona Ryder) knows that it's a scholar (Ben Chaplin) who studies "malignant Narcissism," or bad guy killers. No "Exorcist" this, the movie's special effects are chintzy, the characters are uninvolving and this long-time-on-the-shelf turkey stinks. (D.B.) D-

PAY IT FORWARD (R) A mess, about a fine kid (Haley Joel Osment), a physically and emotionally scarred teacher (Kevin Spacey), the boy's alky mother (Helen Hunt), her loutish absent husband, her homeless mom, a reporter (Jay Mohr) and a vagrant (James Caviezel). Frustrating, because while the story is hopeless, the acting is good. Many missed chances here to have made a coherent tale; fine performers, badly misused. (D.B.) C-

TWO FAMILY HOUSE (R) A nice guy (Michael Rispoli) in Staten Island in 1956, a loser at all he tries, attempts once more to succeed. He buys a house and turns it into a bar. But his upstairs tenant (Kelly Macdonald), a pregnant woman, provides a difficulty, resolvable only in an unexpected way. The milieu is well recreated; the acting, believable. (D.B.) B

Ongoing

ALMOST FAMOUS (R) Cameron Crowe's remembrance of his teenage beginnings as a writer for Rolling Stone, cast as a road trip along with a rock band, trying to get the great interview. Our boy meets the roadies and groupies and gloms to the underbelly of the band phenomenon. With Billy Crudup, Jason Lee and newcomer Patrick Fugit. (D.B.) B+

BARENAKED IN AMERICA (R) The popular Canadian rock-comedy band is shown during two weeks on tour, in actor Jason Priestly's directorial venture. The wonderful voice of Steven Page and engaging personality of Ed Robertson dominate, in an unassuming, unaffected documentary about sudden fame, ecstatic fans and good humor. (D.B.) B

BEST IN SHOW (PG-13) A spoof, by Christopher Guest, of dog lovers and a top-flight dog show, focusing on some devoted canine aficionados (Parker Posey, Michael Hitchcock, Eugene Levy, Catherine O'Hara and others) and how they relate to their pooches and to the prospect of victory. Much of this is improvised and it works catch-as-catch-can. (D.B.) B

BILLY ELLIOT (PG-13) A scrawny lad in an English mining town (Jamie Bell) made to attend boxing lessons by his gruff dad, instead learns to dance and, aided by the no-nonsense teacher (Julie Walters) learns to hoof. Dad and an older brother aren't sympathetic but come around. Bell in real life is a superb dancer, for all that he's only 13, and the movie is uplifting and fun. (D.B.) B+

Tim Meadows tries to think some moves on Karyn Parsons in "The Ladies Man."

THE BROKEN HEARTS CLUB (R) Six young gay pals endure a summer in West Hollywood, wondering whether they are beautiful enough to survive in their competitive milieu. Dean Cain (the erstwhile Superman on "Lois and Clark") is among the performers making what they can of hackneyed material. They are cute, admittedly. (D.B.) C

BUTTERFLY (R) Spain, 1936, on the verge of Civil War, from the perspective of a bright young boy (Manuel Lozano) who is mentored by an old school teacher (Fernando Fernan Gomez) who has left-leaning, maybe even communist sympathies. The beauty of the tale is jarringly shaken by the tough ending. An impressive format for an interesting idea. (D.B.) B

THE CONTENDER (R) The president's (Jeff Bridges) nominee for vice president (Joan Allen) seems to have a sordid past, as a right-wing legislator (Gary Oldman) discovers and exploits. Will she fess up? Is she really guilty? Will the president cave or continue to support her? Will the young congressman (Christian Slater) get ethics? It's a bit overzealous, but the acting — especially Oldman's — is fine. The resolution is stirring. (D.B.) B

DIGIMON (PG) Stupid piffle for the "Pokemon" generation, all about monsters and kids and machinery, in a muddled story set at first in some place Japanesey but then somewhere else. Kids with nothing better to do might enjoy this. Adults will go nuts watching it. (D.B.) D

DR. T AND THE WOMEN (R) The Dallas gynecologist for the upper crust (Richard Gere) has a wife who's gone over the edge (Farrah Fawcett), a chief nurse (Shelley Long) who longs for him, a daughter who's marrying and may be a lesbian, and assorted admirers patients and hunting buddies. Robert Altman's ensemble approach works wonderfully, though as is often the case with his movies, the parts don't always gel. (D.B.) B+

THE EXORCIST (R) The great 1973 William Friedkin scare-fest, augmented now by 11 minutes, retains its power. Linda Blair dominates as the girl who's possessed, with Ellen Burstyn terrific as mom, Jason Miller and Max von Sydow as the exorcists and Lee J. Cobb as a wise D.C. cop. We'd never seen anything like this before. It still captivates. (D.B.) A

GET CARTER (R) An atrocity, lacking so much as one redeeming (social or otherwise) ingredient, about a Las Vegas crime enforcer (Sylvester Stallone) who ventures home to his brother's funeral, concluding that mischief was afoot. Wasting Alan Cumming, Mickey Rourke, Michael Caine and others, the movie is dark, stupidly written, pointless. (D.B.) F

GIRLFIGHT (R) A Brooklyn Hispanic girl (Michelle Rodriguez) defies her traditionalist father and takes up boxing. She meets a nice boy boxer (Santiago Douglas) and a relationship blossoms. Somewhat heavy-handed feminist elements merge with a predictable ethnic striving motif, and the boxing isn't particularly exciting either. (D.B.) C+

INTO THE ARMS OF STRANGERS (PG) A fascinating documentary on one aspect of the Holocaust that hasn't been covered yet — the successful plans to get young Jewish children out of Nazi-occupied countries and into safety in England. But there's much more. The filmmakers have found stunning, rare archival footage that actually shows the story while the children — now elder adults — tell it on camera. Heartbreaking and heartwarming. (E.S.) B+

MEET THE PARENTS (PG-13) The would-be husband (Ben Stiller) of a nice girl (Teri Polo) comes home with her for a family wedding. Dad (Robert De Niro) is a control freak and closet semi-sadist, or so it seems, as everything falls apart. With Blythe Danner as Mom and Owen Wilson as the young lady's ex, now wealthy and perfect. An at times riotous comedy, much involving a cat, this peters out near the end. (D.B.) B

NURSE BETTY (R) A comedy-melodrama about a simple girl (Renee Zellweger) who is fixated on a TV "doctor" (Greg Kinnear) while two criminals (Morgan Freeman and Chris Rock) pursue her. This Neil LaBute film is terrifically written, imagined and acted, keeping the audience continually on its toes. Few of its bits are predictable, none is boring, all are done with panache. (D.B.) A-

THE ORIGINAL KINGS OF COMEDY (R) Foul-mouthed comedians — Steve Harvey, D.L. Hughley, Cedric the Entertainer, Bernie Mac — in concert, with sometimes hilarious riffs on race, sex, life, put-downs of whites and of rappers, a dollop of victim-status self-pitying, considerable wit. Mac is largely incomprehensible, though the overwhelmingly black audience whooped appreciatively. (D.B.) B-

PASSAGE TO PARADISE (R) A tender tale of a disoriented old woman (Julie Harris, in a smashing return to film) hooked up with a reluctant private eye (Tcheky Karyo) in her pursuit of her family home, which her greedy children want to seize from her, and his pursuit of an adulterous couple. Magical things happen, not the least of which is Harris' glorious acting. A lovely small venture. (D.B.) B+

PLACE VENDOME (PG-13) Catherine Deneuve stars as a new widow, of a much older man, who reenters the world she once knew well, gemology, and finds that a handful of diamonds left by her husband are sought by everybody. An ex-lover and a current lover as well as her late husband's possible youthful mistress play their roles in a sometimes confusing yet always compelling tale of intrigue. (D.B.) B-

The Contender (B)

Some there are who call TV's hit series the "Left Wing," and, truth to tell, "West Wing" really is a kind of left-liberal wet dream of what the Clinton White House might be like with an admirable president instead of whom we've got. So, too, "The Contender" is stacked unequivocally on the liberal side of the ledger; one can only wistfully imagine — or recoil from — the prospect of a major television series or theatrical movie that posited an admirable conservative administration hampered by vile liberals. Dream on.

That said, the movie, cartoonish perhaps in some of its characterizations, is wholly committed to the prospect that attractive people, mouthing valiant words about understanding, broad-mindedness and yada yada yada, deserve to run our lives, while those impossibly prudish wretches, those gray presences hovering about in the shadows, tut-tutting and lip-smacking, deserve only obloquy. If not quite Shakespearian in its polarities, and in no way Shakespearian in its utter lack of subtleties or nuance, still, "The Contender" manages to provide a rousing good time at the movies. It plays with our emotions such that we're puppets on its string, but it plays them well, and its performers are so wholly engaged in their carryings-on that we are inextricably pulled right into it. There'll always be a D.C.!

The president (Jeff Bridges) has to designate a new vice president — the elected one has just died — and is leaning toward Senator Jack Hathaway (William Petersen), who has recently attempted to save a drowning woman. But the chief of staff (the impossibly wooden Sam Elliott, who, remarkably, manages to get work in movies), somehow seeing this act as a variant on Chappaquiddick — how, one can't imagine: The screen situation is valorous; the Kennedy one, horrific — leads to the president instead picking Senator Laine Hanson (Joan Allen, in what may become her breakthrough to star status, at last, after countless superb performances), who would be the first female vice president.

Joan Allen tries to come to grips with the idea of "justice."

But there is a viper in the bosom of this government, GOP Congressman Shelly Runyon (Gary Oldman, chewing the scenery but captivating), whose very surname somehow suggests nasal congestion, who is hell-bent on axing this nomination. While he would accept the seemingly heroic Hathaway, he is obdurate about Laine Hanson. And — here it comes — he gets hold of photographs seemingly showing her pulling a Lewinsky at a long-ago college fraternity orgy.

To round out the frolics, a young congressman (Christian Slater), aiming to advance himself, is drawn both to opportunism and to honor. Meanwhile, the lady won't deign to answer the charges, the president lets her dangle slowly in the wind before deciding what to do, the right-wing Republican congressman smells blood and swims to the kill, and we wait breathlessly wondering how all this will play out. Yes, it's hokey, and oh my is the surprise plot twist idiotic, but it is continually entertaining. And the real election is almost upon us.

Jamie Bell thinks twice about whether he's made the right decision.

Billy Elliot (B+)

A youngster's dream, struggled for and achieved, is a venerable staple of the cinema: Let's put on a show! Recently "Girlfight" provided a sample of this: a contemporary New York Hispanic girl striving to become a boxer. While pugilism is a barbarism masquerading as a sport — its avowed purpose is to pummel somebody to submission — classical dance is an art, arguably the finest, certainly the most strenuous, of the performing arts. Though some recent efforts to chronicle this art, like "Center Stage," have tanked at the box office, here we have on with better prospects.

This sleeper from England centers on 11-year-old Billy (Jamie Bell), living in the northeast, in a coal-mining town, during the prolonged strike that was ultimately broken by the Thatcher government, one of the legacies of that era that still, understandably, rankles. Billy's family is broken, too: His mother has just died, his grandmother (Jean Haywood) is semi-dotty and heading toward senility, his father (Gary Lewis) is crushed by grief and torn between his union loyalties and the need to feed his family, and his brother (Jamie Draven) is angry at the world and disdainful of his mournful father.

Dad has scrounged up the money to get Billy into a boxing class — the machismo fixations in England are no less absurd and deadening than our own — but the boy, noticing a group of girls practicing dance, is transfixed. He instinctively knows his destiny, and still in his boxing helmet, gloves and shoes, puts himself into the humiliating position of practicing that first day at the barre. Billy has found his metier, though the prospect horrifies his father and enrages his brother. The usual charge of "poof" tumbles easily out of their mouths — poof is British slang for fag; fag is British slang for cigarette — but Billy doesn't see himself that way. Nor does the ground-down woman (Julie Walters, in another sensational performance), who, cigarette inextricably tied to her hand, coaches the girls and agrees to give private lessons, on the house, as it were, to the lad. She recognizes his talents; she has found here cause. As for the "poof" matter, Billy's friendship with a classmate likelier to be gay is one of the most endearing and least gushy, albeit strange, palships in current films.

The film's perhaps necessary diversion into the miners' strike story nonetheless jibes a bit clumsily with the central tale of Billy's ungainly mastery of his art and his voyage down to London to audition for the prestigious Royal Ballet School. But the ferventness of the boy's commitment to his calling, and young Bell's promising acting debut — he is already an accomplished dancer — centers the film, and few moviegoers will fail to be drawn right into it with fingers crossed in hopes of his success. Bell's take on Billy is that of a sober, no devil-may-care boy bearing a burden — two, actually: a family that needs to solidify, and a talent that is derided in his milieu. This lovely film makes the heart soar.

Maldives — heaven on Earth

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. We've always wanted to visit the Maldives after reading a magazine article about the country. We're avid water enthusiasts (I'm a snorkeler and my husband loves to scuba dive).

Is it really worth the trip, or would we be better off going somewhere closer like Hawaii or the Caribbean for a tropical vacation?

Where would you recommend staying, and what's the best way to get there?

A. The Maldives, a chain of 1,190 coral islands scattered across the Indian Ocean, are truly heaven on Earth: friendly people, wonderful food, constant tropical breezes, sugar sand beaches, amazing aquatic life and, perhaps most important, a real sense that you're not in just another tourist destination (you're thousands of miles away from the nearest fast-food joint, a benefit that even Hawaii doesn't offer). So, yes, it's worth the trip.

The best way to get there is through Singapore, where, since this is truly a long way to go, you should break up your trip for a couple of days to explore that fascinating city. Singapore Airlines offers some surprisingly reasonable packages with Asian Affair Holidays, starting at about $2,000.

Good places to stay include Club Med (1-800-CLUBMED) if you like the all-inclusive concept, or, for something more luxurious, the Four Seasons Resort (1-800-332-3442), which occupies its own private island and consists of individual beachfront or over-water huts.

Q. We were about to sign up for a trip to Israel when the recent fighting broke out between the Palestinians and Israelis. We're glad we didn't book the trip, but we have a question for future reference: What if we had booked it and needed to cancel because of the unrest?

Would travel insurance have covered all of the expenses resulting from such a cancellation, either before we left or once we arrived had we decided to cut our trip short and return home?

A. That depends on the company you buy the insurance from, and how they define the conflict in Israel. Some insurance policies don't provide coverage for acts of war, but they will cover terrorist incidents that aren't part of a declared war, providing that such an incident has been reported in the media.

But, even if they do cover terrorism, most policies won't reimburse you if there's been a similar incident in the same country within the previous 12 months.

Also, some policies won't provide coverage if there's been a State Department advisory warning travelers not to visit a particular country. So, there are a lot of loopholes. If you're visiting an area that has a history of trouble, read your insurance policy carefully.

Q. Can you recommend a good package deal to Fiji? We're on a very limited budget.

A. Pleasant Fiji Holidays (1-888-636-2001) offers a great deal starting at $860 per person, double occupancy, at the Shangri-la Mocambo Resort, including round-trip air on Air Pacific from Los Angeles. This price is valid for Tuesday and Saturday departures only, between now and March 31, 2001.

Follow up: Readers may recall the plight of the 83-year-old woman with a heart condition who missed her granddaughter's wedding owing to a canceled United flight (she was forced to dash through a connecting airport only to miss her rescheduled flight, then to spend 10 hours at a connecting airport, and then take a red-eye transcontinental flight, all in vain as it turned out).

She was seeking a refund for her husband's ticket (luckily, in retrospect, he decided not to accompany her at the last minute), which seemed more than reasonable under the circumstances.

I contacted United on her behalf, and the airline merely offered her $300 in future travel vouchers, but refused to refund her husband's fare (they did offer to waive the usual $75 reissue fee if he uses his ticket within a year of original issue).

It's doubtful that given their advanced years, either she or her husband will be traveling anytime soon.

I really thought that considering the torture this poor woman was put through that United would make an exception and refund her husband's fare, especially since had he shown up at the airport and learned that his flight was going to be late, he could have requested a full refund, even on a nonrefundable ticket. I was wrong.

Fantastic flowers and foliages for fall

old-fashioned daisies bear a multitude of flowers throughout the late fall, multiplying rapidly, and are readily transplanted by the shovelful at any time during the growing season. A lovely companion to these pastel daisies, the so-called perennial ageratum (Eupatorium coelestinum) resembles a tall 2- to 3-foot version of the tender annual with its clusters of tiny lavender-blue powder puffs. A prolific spreader which is late to break dormancy in the spring, it prefers moist soils like other members of the Joe-pye weed family. An additional bonus is that it is irresistible to migrating monarchs and other lingering butterflies.

Few perennials offer the intense, cobalt-blue flowers of the fall-blooming leadwort (Ceratostigma plumbaginoides). Its brilliant blue flowers appear above mats of deep green foliage which gradually turns to a deep bronze or red as the season progresses. An excellent ground cover for sun or light shade in well-drained soils, it performs well in rock gardens or at the front of a mixed perennial border.

As the large leaves of hosta yellow and flop, the shady border can lose much of its appeal in late October, but among the withering foliage, there are a few gems to delight the gardener as the fall cleanup proceeds. The dainty flowers of hardy cyclamens, in shades of pink and white, are a welcome sight among the leaf litter. Fleshy bronze flower stalks suddenly produce distinctive, nodding flowers like clusters of little butterflies atop stunning, toothed, deep green foliage mottled with bold silver streaks. These marginally hardy tubers should be planted in humus-enriched, well-drained but moist soils in protected areas beneath trees and shrubs where they will gradually spread to form colonies.

The unusual flowers of the toad lily (Tricyrtis spp.) never fail to bring a smile. Despite its unpleasant common name, this late-blooming perennial is a must for the shady border.

The unusual flowers of the toad lily (Tricyrtis spp.) never fail to bring a smile. Despite its unpleasant common name, this late-blooming perennial is a must for the shady border. The gracefully arching foliage produces numerous white to pale lavender-pink blossoms generously dotted with purple speckles. The overall appearance is much like an orchid. This fascinating shade-loving perennial should be grown where its unique flowers can be easily observed to appreciate its intricate mottling. Another candidate for the moist, well-drained, partially shaded garden, numerous toad lily cultivars are available which include variations in flower and foliage. Locating a source for these odd-looking perennials may require a little wandering, but several South Shore nurseries stock them and they are well worth the search.

Hedlund, Cantwell swap barbs at debate

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEPOU@CNC.COM

"He doesn't want to be senator any more."

"He is just another Democratic pawn."

The fourth and last debate between Republican incumbent Robert Hedlund and Democratic challenger James Cantwell was as much about the man as the stand.

The contenders for the Plymouth and Norfolk District Senate seat swapped viewpoints and barbs before an audience of 135 voters crowding the Sanborn Auditorium and balcony at Hingham Town Hall during the Oct. 25 debate sponsored by Community Newspaper Company in conjunction with 95.9 WATD-FM.

The debate capped a series of verbal duels in the hotly-contested race.

Cantwell, citing his opponent's unsuccessful bid last year to be Weymouth's first mayor, charged that Hedlund has his eyes on a race for Congress.

"Why should voters believe that you won't leave half-way through your term?" Cantwell said.

Hedlund, who supports term limits, said there should be diversity on Beacon Hill, a voice from the private sector, not a concentration of lawyers or career politicians.

"I didn't come up through the ranks. I didn't toil in the political sandbox. At some point, I will move on, but not now," Hedlund said.

Hedlund defended his role as a political maverick and charged that Cantwell is just a face on the Democratic Party machine.

"I will continue to fight on behalf of the people, not for special interests," Hedlund said.

Democrat Jim Cantwell hopes to unseat state Sen. Robert Hedlund.

Republican Robert Hedlund is seeking reelection to the state senate.

The contenders continued to spar on issues including the Greenbush rail line restoration, the Mills mall proposed for the former naval air station, education reform, gun control, capital punishment, and abortion.

While both oppose the Mills mall proposed for the former naval air station, the candidates sparred over who did what and when.

Hedlund charged that Cantwell did not come out against the mall until June 14, the day the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation in charge of base redevelopment voted to extend negotiations with Mills, too late to use his influence to stop the project.

Cantwell said he had made his opposition

Big turnout expected at polls Nov. 7

Tight races should bring out the voters

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Thanks to a number of close races, both locally and nationally, voter turnout in Cohasset Tuesday is expected to be as high as 85 percent, Town Clerk Marion Douglas said.

"I think [the tight races] are going to help," she explained.

Polls will be open from 7 a.m. until 8 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

Locally, it's down to the wire in both the state representative race, where three candidates — Democrat Garrett Bradley of Hingham, Republican Mary Anne McKenna of Hingham and independent candidate Walter Murray of Hull — are vying to replace the retiring Republican Mary Jeanette Murray. And in the contest for the district's state senate seat, Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, hopes to hold off a challenge from Democrat James Cantwell, also of Weymouth, and win a fifth term on Beacon Hill.

"It's usually pretty good when the candidates are so close in the polls."
— Town Clerk Marion Douglas

Nationally, Vice-President Al Gore trails Texas Governor George W. Bush by single-digits going into the last week, according to an MSNBC poll. Traditionally, said Douglas, an interesting presidential race has provided a boost to voter turnout numbers. In 1996, when President Bill Clinton fended off a challenge by former Kansas Senator Robert Dole, 80.2 percent of Cohasset's registered voters cast ballots. In 1992, when Clinton ran against sitting president George Bush and Reform Party candidate H. Ross Perot, 87.2 percent of Cohasset voted. The numbers dropped in 1998, without the help of a presidential race, when then-acting Governor Paul Cellucci faced Democrat Scott Harshbarger. Just a 68 percent turnout was registered in

Sewer commission defends Central Cohasset overrun

Selectmen order audit of sewer department

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset selectmen begrudgingly voted to recommend at the Nov. 13 special Town Meeting an article which would authorize the sewer commission to spend an additional $600,000 to finish the Central Cohasset sewer project.

After Sewer Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil again defended the $15.6 million overrun, selectmen voted 4-1 at their meeting Monday night that the town has no choice but to pay the bill and get the project done.

"I have a lot of frustration," Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan told Vanderweil. "I don't know how to vote. But logic tells me I can't vote no, that we still have to finish the work.

"People are just going to have to hold their nose and vote for this [at Town Meeting]," he said.

Selectmen Merle Brown was the lone dissenting vote. Brown felt the commission's plans to spend the $600,000 wasn't "concrete" enough and asked to see more specifics.

Selectmen also unanimously voted to order an audit of the sewer department's finances. Every town department is audited every few years and selectmen decided this year it was the sewer commission's turn. Vanderweil said that would be a "waste of the taxpayer's dollars."

He again defended the need for more money, arguing he thought the overrun was reasonable.

"People are just going to have to hold their nose and vote for this [at Town Meeting]."
— Selectman Tom Callahan

"You can't be critical of a 4 percent overrun for this complex of a project, that was budgeted in 1996," he said.

The sewer commission revealed the shortfall Oct. 10. According to the commission and Tutela Engineering, the project accumulated almost $800,000 in change orders, which ate through the $1 million contingency fund set up to cover overruns. The commission also blamed the shortfall on higher than anticipated police detail costs, additional engineering studies and needed aesthetic improvements.

In a memo to selectmen, town Finance Director Michael Buckley criticized the project's budgeting process. "Evidently, the original budget did not contain segregated line items for police details, plantings and aesthetics. Once those items were subtracted, the reserve for unforeseen situations was down to 3 percent, much too low for a project of this complexity," he wrote.

Tutela officials said at an Oct. 10 selectmen's meeting, they didn't realize the project was in financial trouble until the week before because some bills weren't recorded until then.

"Somehow, not only did the construction and legal invoice not get recorded, but in addition, six of their

METCO program benefits Boston and Cohasset kids

Annual dinner is November 5

Antoine Miller, a senior at Cohasset High School and a Roxbury resident, has attended Cohasset public schools since the first grade, thanks to the town's involvement with the METCO program.

But he is not the first person in his family to earn a Cohasset High diploma through the METCO program. His mother, Marie, is a member of the CHS Class of 1980.

Now entering its third decade in Cohasset, the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity, or METCO as it's better known, gives minority students an opportunity to take advantage of the education available in communities such as Cohasset.

That's why Antoine was pushed to come here.

"From first to third grades I didn't like it, and I didn't want to come back," he recalled. He described himself as "nervous" and "didn't talk much" for the first few years that he made the hour-plus trip from his home in Mattapan down the Southeast Expressway and Rte. 3 to Cohasset, a town with a black population of less than 1 percent.

"But my mom pushed me, and I'm glad she did," Antoine said with a smile.

Halloween update

Compared to past Halloweens, Tuesday night was relatively quiet, said Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan. Though some vandalism did occur around town, absent were the roaming packs of teenagers that wreaked havoc downtown last year.

"It was pretty good," Noonan said.

A car's windows were smashed in the town parking lot, flowers torn up in front of Kimball's Hotel, and shaving cream sprayed around the grounds of the Deer Hill school, according to police reports. Noonan said a paintball gun was allegedly fired at a car.

"Overall the kids were very respectful of the curfew," said Noonan.

A voluntary 9:30 p.m. curfew for teenagers was recommended by town officials.

But before that, and despite the weather, Noonan said it was a very successful Halloween.

"There must have been 50 kids at my own house," he said. "It was a pretty decent night."

Personnel switch

To fill the vacancy in the selectmen's office, Christine Fitzgerald has been named the new administrative assistant for Town Manager Mark Haddad. She replaces Joyce Studley. Fitzgerald had previously worked in the Accounting Office, and was responsible for payroll, answering to Finance Director Michael Buckley.

In the selectmen's office, Fitzgerald will still be responsible for payroll, but also keeping the minutes of selectmen meetings and other administrative duties, Haddad explained to the board at their meeting Monday.

A part-time person will be hired to fill hours in the accounting office.

Selectmen to meet

Because next Tuesday is Election Day, no selectmen's meeting has been scheduled for the upcoming week. Selectmen are next scheduled to convene at the Nov. 13 special Town Meeting, and then the following night, Tuesday, Nov. 14.

Deep ecology study circle meets tonight

An introductory presentation for those who might be interested in forming or joining a group will be held Nov. 2, 7:30 p.m., at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave. To RSVP or for more information, contact Jim Shipsky, 781-383-9024, shipsky@cs.com.

A Sustainable Step New England representative will be present to answer questions and conduct a short discussion as a sample of what a study circle is like.

A workbook with readings will be available for those who wish to join the group. The workbook cost is $15; there are no other costs involved. The group will continue to meet once a week for nine weeks.

Volunteer at senior center

The Cohasset Senior Center needs volunteers.

- Volunteers for Tuesday and Thursday luncheons.
- Volunteers for van drivers.
- Volunteers for an afternoon at the center.
- Volunteers for database entry.

If you can help with any of these—please call the Cohasset Elder Affairs at 383-9112.

Safe driving

In addition to all the ongoing programs, "55-Alive" is being offered Dec. 7 and 14 at the community center. It is a program sanctioned by AARP. Its focus is to make participants aware of what may have become bad driving habits. So many older drivers who limit themselves to just driving locally, and are reluctant to give that up, will have a renewed sense of confidence and ability. The speaker is Cal White from Plymouth. Videos and question and answer are part of the program. Call the office for details, 383-9112.

Beechwood graves

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m.

Area resistance to new Logan runway takes off

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Opposition to a proposed new runway at Logan Airport is growing.

Some residents of Hingham, Cohasset and Hull are joining together to fight Runway 14/32, which they say would negatively impact their and other South Shore communities. A number of town officials have also expressed reservations about the project.

And runway opponents are hoping other communities will soon join in the fight to stop the project.

The new runway, if it becomes a reality, is expected to direct about 70,000 more flights annually over Boston Harbor, which would affect the three communities.

Stephen Lathrop, chairman of the Hull jet noise task force, recently presented Hingham selectmen with maps showing where over South Shore communities Massport would like to place the majority of current and future low jet paths. He also showed the maps to town officials in Hull and Cohasset.

Representatives of the Hingham and recently formed Cohasset task forces are working closely with Lathrop.

"Figures in Massport's reports indicate the South Shore has been singled out for 'special treatment,'" he said.

He further noted some of the existing flights over the South Shore area are so low "it's a little like being at the airport."

John Silva, manager of environmental programs for the New England Region Federal Aviation Administration, however, recently denied the South Shore is being targeted.

He further stated that sensitivity to the environment is the first priority.

Eric Oddleifson of the Cohasset task force, attended the Hingham selectmen's meeting and said when Lathrop presented the maps to Cohasset selectmen recently they were "aghast."

He also noted the town sent a letter to a number of elected officials citing an "extreme negative impact" on Cohasset and other South Shore communities which would occur if the new runway were to be built due to additional air traffic, substantial noise and the negative environmental impact.

At Hingham's April town meeting, voters supported a warrant article asking the board of selectmen to do everything in its power to protect Hingham from noise and other impacts of jet air traffic to and from Logan Airport.

Massport's recent application to the Federal Aviation Administration for clearance to build a new runway resulted in an FAA request for more study.

Consequently, a blue ribbon study panel was appointed — half by Gov. Paul Cellucci, a proponent of 14/32, and half by Mayor Menino, who opposes the runway — to study the effects of the proposed runway.

Despite the expected impact on South Shore communities, however, there's not one representative of that area on the panel. That fact distresses runway opponents in Hingham, Cohasset and Hull because of the huge negative impact they say Runway 14/32 would have on their towns.

"You can't run a runway this way," Lathrop said. "There will be a heavy stream of incoming traffic which will affect the South Shore and we have the right to know what they're doing with the airplanes."

"You can't run a runway this way."

— Stephen Lathrop, chairman of the Hull jet noise task force

According to James Peters, spokesperson for the FAA New England Region, the panel meetings, which are help at the Volpe Center in Cambridge, are open to the public. Concerns made to the panel during the public comment period scheduled during each session are included in the minutes of the meeting and posted on the FAA web site: www.faa.gov/region/ane/bostoneis.

However, said Peters, panel members were appointed this spring, and there's no provision allowing for members of the community to participate in the panel's work at this time.

The Hingham task force is concentrating its efforts on existing air traffic — which they say is waking up children and adults in the middle of the night in some parts of town — as well as stopping the new runway because the group feels it would focus a tremendous amount of additional traffic on the South Shore area. The formation of a South Shore jet noise task force is currently in the works, in fact.

State representative Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, and Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, have spoken out against the additional runway.

Last month, Hedlund — in response to complaints about Runway 14/32 his office has received from residents in Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Weymouth — organized a meeting for town officials from the four communities. Lathrop made his map presentation at that time.

"It was an important first step in bringing the four towns together to coordinate our efforts (to oppose the runway)," said Hedlund. "There's strength in numbers."

Lathrop and Hedlund plan to make a presentation about the runway to the Weymouth town council soon.

"We hope to have Weymouth join the effort formally," Hedlund said. "Eventually we hope to include Quincy."

According to Lathrop, the Town of Hull recently called the Runway 14/32 project a serious threat to the well-being of the town and to the peace, health, safety and enjoyment of its citizens and the value of their property.

Furthermore, the town appropriated a sum of money not to exceed $5,000 to promote public awareness of the effects of the project. Hull town manager Phil Lemnios is also drafting an "urgent request" to FAA Administrator Jane Garvey for a meeting with affected South Shore communities to discuss the impacts of Runway 14/32 on the South Shore and to demand immediate representation for the South Shore on the blue ribbon panel which is currently taking a look at the environmental effects of the project.

The Winthrop Air Environmental Health Committee recently sent an open letter to Garvey pointing out the importance of addressing the health impact of airport operations and related ground traffic.

"It is now well past the time when the public health costs of current and projected levels of airport operations must be comprehensively incorporated into the bottom line of any proposed Logan airport buildup," the letter says.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HELLO EVERYONE

I am really hoping that as we are all reading today's paper, it is with excitement and relief that we all had a safe, uneventful and fun Halloween. The weather made a quick change to get us all into the spirit of late fall and the witches, goblins and many other creatures and characters were out in full force. Some of the costumes that I saw were truly works of art and everyone looked great.

AT BRYANT

Bryant College had some great news to send this week. Cohasset students, Travis M. Moore, a freshman marketing major and Christopher E. Pratt, a freshman undeclared major, are both attending Bryant College and are students in the class of 2004. We look forward to hearing more about these two young men.

BALLERINA ON STAGE

One of my favorite performances each year is the Boston Ballet's "The Nutcracker," and this year in the role of Polichinelle, is Cohasset's very own Cassandra Cardelle. Cassandra has been a student at the Boston Ballet School for 5-1/2 years and joins more than 400 other young dancers from eastern Massachusetts and adjoining states. This year's second act of "The Nutcracker" will feature several newly-choreographed scenes by Daniel Pelzig, highlighted by a brand new concept for the Mother Ginger sequence. This is definitely a performance that brings the holiday spirit to anyone who is able to watch it. Great job, Cassandra!

NEW OFFICER

The Suffolk County Sheriff's Department graduated 16 new officers from basic training recently, and one of them is a Cohasset resident. Officer Charles K. Botts successfully completed the six-week basic training program which conforms to the standards of the Massachusetts Sheriff's Association Education and Training committee. This training included more than 30 lesson topics, and after graduation, officers were assigned to the House of Correction or the Nashua Street Jail. This is a wonderful accomplishment Charles, nice work.

PIZZA FUNDRAISER

Hey, do any of you out there love pizza? Well, if you do then find a student who currently attends the Deer Hill School and ask for them to show you the fundraiser they are currently involved in. You can purchase yummy, delicious pizza kits from Little Caesar's, that can be frozen or eaten right away! Just think, no cooking for a night. For each kit that they sell, $5 goes towards the purchase of "AlphaSmart" keyboards, a wonderful tool for them to use to write reports, projects and other great things that they may be working on. If you have any questions or cannot find a student, please call Adrienne MacCarthy (383-1028), Susan Galligan (383-0765) or Lynn Conway (383-6695.) These pizzas will taste great, feed the family and help to earn funds for a really great cause.

THANKS, CUB SCOUTS

I would like to send a great big thank you to the boys in Webelo1 Cub Scouts. This great group of boys worked on Saturday, Oct 21, cleaning Rocky Beach here in Cohasset. What a fantastic thing for the boys to get involved in. If we all took some time out of our own lives to make a difference somewhere in town, think of how nice everything would look. These boys were able to stop and take a few hours out of their day to help, maybe we can to.

As we start to move into the holiday times, I would like to ask everyone to take a few minutes to look around and notice anyone who may be elderly, alone or ill. If you know of someone or hear of someone who may need some help, try to include them in your planning if you can. This may mean asking if they would like to have you pick something up at the store, mail something for them at the post office, make some goodies for them or anything else that they may need. As we get caught up in our own lives it is very easy to forget other people who may just need a little love and attention. This is also a great way to have your children learn about caring and compassion, maybe they could make some extra cards or cookies to bring to a special friend in need. Just some thoughts that I am going to try and include in my holiday plans, I hope that you can too.

That is all for this week, please send any information, news or special days to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or 923-1057. Have a great week, Jennifer Piepenbrink

WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry

Henry — Fox

Announcement is made of the wedding of Dr. Kathleen Fox, daughter of Paul and Jeanne Fox of Quebec, Canada, to Charles Henry, son of Dr. and Mrs. William and Carol Henry of Cohasset Sunday, June 11, 2000, at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset. The Rev. Gary Ritts officiated at the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and wore a Tomasina designed wedding dress. Attending the bride as maid of honor was Dr. Claudia Harper of Quebec and Charlestown. Bridesmaids were Chloe Durant of Vermont and Medford; Ann Franzia, sister of the groom, of Cohasset and Seattle; and Emily Piovoso of Long Island and Shrewsbury. Madison and Perry Lawson of Duxbury were flower girls and carried Teddy bears.

Bill Henry of Cohasset and New York City served as best man for his brother. Ushers included David Cameron, cousin of the bride, from Quebec and Joseph Franzia, brother-in-law of the groom, from Northern California and Seattle. Also serving as ushers were Adam Durant of Cohasset and Medford; John Linsley of Cohasset and Newburyport; Robert Breslin of Providence, Eric Crews of Maryland and Cohasset; and Sean Sweeney of New Jersey and Quincy.

The bride is a graduate of The Ursulin School in Quebec City and received a doctorate degree in veterinary medicine from The University of Montreal in 1995. She completed an internship at South Shore Veterinary Associates in Weymouth which was then owned by the groom's father. She is now practicing at Dedham Veterinary Associates.

The groom is a graduate of Brewster Academy in Wolfeboro, N. H. and St. Mary's College of Maryland in 1993. Presently, he is working as the business manager at his father's veterinary practices in Dedham and Buzzard's Bay.

A reception was held at Atlantica and ended with the bride and groom leaving in a tug boat. The couple honeymooned in Bermuda and are now living in Duxbury.

As an Assistant District Attorney for Norfolk County, Jim worked with at-risk kids to keep them in school and off the streets. As a former selectman, Jim, worked with Cohasset officials to develop a regional recycling plan. As your next state senator, Jim's priorities will include:

- Changing the School Building Assistance Program to make it easier for communities like Cohasset to pay for new school projects.
- Fighting for passage of Community Preservation Act to allow communities to better protect their open spaces and historic areas.
- Reforming our health care system to ensure basic patient rights, and provide prescription drug coverage.

GOVERNMENT by REFERENDUM

A readers' guide to statewide ballot initiatives

On Nov. 7, Massachusetts voters will consider eight statewide ballot questions, in addition to state, national and local political races.

Ranging from a proposed ban on greyhound racing to a reduction in the state income tax, the questions span the political spectrum. Proponents and opponents have formed organized campaigns for all but one of the initiatives, and the debate over some has been as heated as any discourse this political season.

Community Newspaper Company, as a service to our readers, has distilled these issues, as well as the arguments for and against, into a voters' guide to the eight ballot initiatives.

- QUESTION 1 seeks to amend the state Constitution to redraw state legislative districts two years earlier using new census data.
- QUESTION 2 seeks to prohibit incarcerated felons from voting in state elections.
- QUESTION 3 seeks to ban greyhound racing in Massachusetts.
- QUESTION 4 seeks to cut the statewide income tax to 5 percent.
- QUESTION 5 seeks to provide universal health care to all residents.
- QUESTION 6 seeks to provide tax credits for Mass Pike tolls and automobile excise taxes.
- QUESTION 7 seeks to provide income tax deductions for charitable giving.
- QUESTION 8 seeks to provide more treatment programs for convicted drug users and make it harder to seize drug dealers' property.

Should income tax be cut to 5 percent?

QUESTION 4 seeks to cut the statewide income tax to 5 percent.

With state coffers overflowing and the economy showing no signs of slowing down, anti-tax activists say the time is ripe for a tax cut first promised in 1988.

Ballot Question 4 would chop about 14 percent off the average family's state income tax, and reverse a Dukakis-era tax hike passed to deal with an unexpected economic recession.

Gov. Paul Cellucci, the tax cut's biggest champion, said lowering the income tax rate from 5.85 percent to 5 percent will make Massachusetts more competitive in an era of global competition and "put a stake through the heart of the old label 'Taxachusetts.'"

But a long list of Democratic opponents say the cut is too steep and too fast, and could jeopardize the state's ability to provide services and pay off its $12.4 billion capital debt.

House Speaker Thomas Finneran and Senate President Thomas Birmingham – say the cut will hinder the state's ability to pay for the $14 billion Big Dig and fully fund education reform.

State Treasurer Shannon O'Brien said the cut would tear huge holes in the state's financial safety net, and cripple the state's ability to survive a recession if and when the economy slows.

The tax cut debate has pit teachers unions and Democratic politicians against Republicans, Libertarians and area business groups.

By the numbers alone, Question 4 would lower the personal income tax rate from its current level of 5.85 percent to 5 percent by 2003, cutting about a third of that .85 percent drop each year. A law now on the books would drop the rate to 5.75 percent next year.

Analysts predict that if the economy stays the same over the next few years, the tax cut would mean a loss of about $1.2 billion a year in state revenue. It would eat up most, if not all, of the state's current budget surpluses, which are on pace to hit $1 billion in the current fiscal year.

Combatants in the tax cut debate disagree over what the cut would mean for state spending in times of a recession.

Supporters of Question 4 claim that cutting taxes will put more disposable income back into the economy and help state residents deal with the high costs of housing and home heating fuel. They also say a tax cut will stave off recession, and thereby mean higher state revenues in the long run.

Opponents of the cut warn that continuing surpluses are no sure thing. The state's $780 million operating surplus this year, for example, vanished when the state had to find ways to pay its share of cost overruns on the Big Dig.

DAVID B. CARUSO

Should Mass. Pike tolls be refunded to commuters?

QUESTION 6 would create a state tax credit for tolls and automobile excise taxes paid in Massachusetts.

The group known as Free the Pike has tried since the 1996 election to abolish tolls on the Massachusetts Turnpike.

Thwarted by court rulings that said the Pike had a legal obligation to its bondholders, the Free the Pike coalition this year created a new method to accomplish its goal.

The group has proposed a state tax credit for tolls across the state, which currently covers the Pike, the Tobin Bridge, and the tunnels crossing Boston Harbor. And, to broaden its appeal to commuters throughout Massachusetts, Free the Pike also proposed a tax credit for the automobile excise taxes motorists pay each year.

To supporters, the argument for Question 6 is simple: When the Pike was built in the 1950s, residents were told tolls would end once the bonds to build the highway were paid off.

The original $525 million debt was retired in 1984, but tolls remain, and in fact are slated to increase in 2002.

"There was an undeniable promise that the tolls would come when the road was paid off," said Doug Barth, the Sudbury resident who started Free the Pike in 1994. "Ours is very much a middle-class tax cut – the people who are paying the big tolls are the people using their cars to get to work."

The tolls tax credit would save a Pike commuter between Framingham and Boston about $700 a year. Any motorist who pays $500 in annual excise taxes for a $20,000 car could also win that back through the tax credit.

But opponents, ranging from Republican Gov. Paul Cellucci to the Massachusetts Teachers Association, say Question 6 would take too much in tax revenue from the state.

"It would cut funding for local and state roads and bridges, encourage more traffic on our already congested highways, force taxpayers to subsidize truckers and others who use our roads, and threaten the stability of the state's finances," said Michael Widmer of the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation. "Other than offering a free lunch, Question 6 is a very bad idea."

Free the Pike supporters say the measure, if approved, would cost the state about $450 million in annual revenue, and then increase as tolls and automobile values rise.

But an analysis by the Taxpayers Foundation said the cost would be $623 million next year and $846 million in five years.

JOHN GREGG

Should we have universal health care?

QUESTION 5 seeks to change the health-care system in Massachusetts, leading to universal health care.

Ballot Question 5 is a complex issue that gets to right to the heart of the state of health care in Massachusetts.

The referendum would mandate a plan for universal coverage for Bay State residents, put a moratorium on for-profit conversions and give people the freedom to choose physicians.

Those in favor of the question believe reform is needed to free care givers and patients from the restraints imposed by health maintenance organizations.

Those opposed to Question 5 believe the measure aims to eliminate the very controls that help make the system work.

With less than two weeks before Election Day, the debate has boiled down to a grass-roots fight between medical professionals and a costly advertising war bankrolled by health maintenance organizations.

Supporters say the measure would empower patients and create a health-care system based on patients' needs, rather than financial incentives that can delay or limit care.

Opponents, including the non-partisan Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation, say the measure would eliminate the system's current checks and balances, create new bureaucracies, increase health insurance premiums, and cost taxpayers up to $5.6 billion a year.

Many organizations, such as the AFL-CIO, originally supported Question 5 but backed off on their stance once a "Patient's Bill of Rights" was signed into law by Gov. Paul Cellucci earlier this year.

The new law, which took three years to pass, requires HMOs to pay for all emergency room visits; creates a new state agency to hear complaints from patients who claim their HMOs refuse to cover the type of care they need, and puts regulations in place that make it tougher for for-profit companies to buy nonprofit hospitals.

MICHELLE HILLMAN

CHOICES 2000

Should the state send drug offenders into treatment?

QUESTION 8 would provide more treatment programs for convicted drug users and make it harder to seize drug dealers' property.

The idea that drug addiction is a medical problem better solved by doctors than judges is behind a ballot question that would provide more treatment programs for convicted drug users and make it harder to seize drug dealers' property.

Ballot Question 8 would encourage judges to send drug-crime convicts to mandatory treatment programs for first and second offenses, rather than to prison.

It would make it tougher to seize assets from suspected drug dealers, and mandate that confiscated drug money be used to fund treatment programs.

Supporters of the measure say they hope it will reduce the number of drug cases on criminal dockets by getting repeat offenders clean, once and for all. They also say it will be a more successful tool in the war on drugs than jailing drug addicts.

"It's certainly better for the Commonwealth that someone get cleaned up, get a job, get treatment, than not," said Al Gordon, a spokesman for the Coalition for Fair Treatment, the group fueling the ballot initiative.

"No one is arrogant enough to suggest we can solve 100 percent of the problem for 100 percent of the people. But why not do it for as many people as we can?"

But the measure is vehemently opposed by law enforcement groups and the state's district attorneys, who say it is a thinly veiled first step toward legalizing drugs.

Prosecutors say it will do little more than give hardened drug traffickers a "get out of jail free" card. Police warn that removing the threat of prison will wreck their ability to combat drug dealing. They also warn that making it tougher to seize assets from dealers will take away a valuable source of revenue for their anti-drug efforts.

Under one controversial provision of the law, defendants accused of manufacturing, trafficking or distributing up to an ounce of cocaine could get the charges dropped if they complete a court-mandated treatment program.

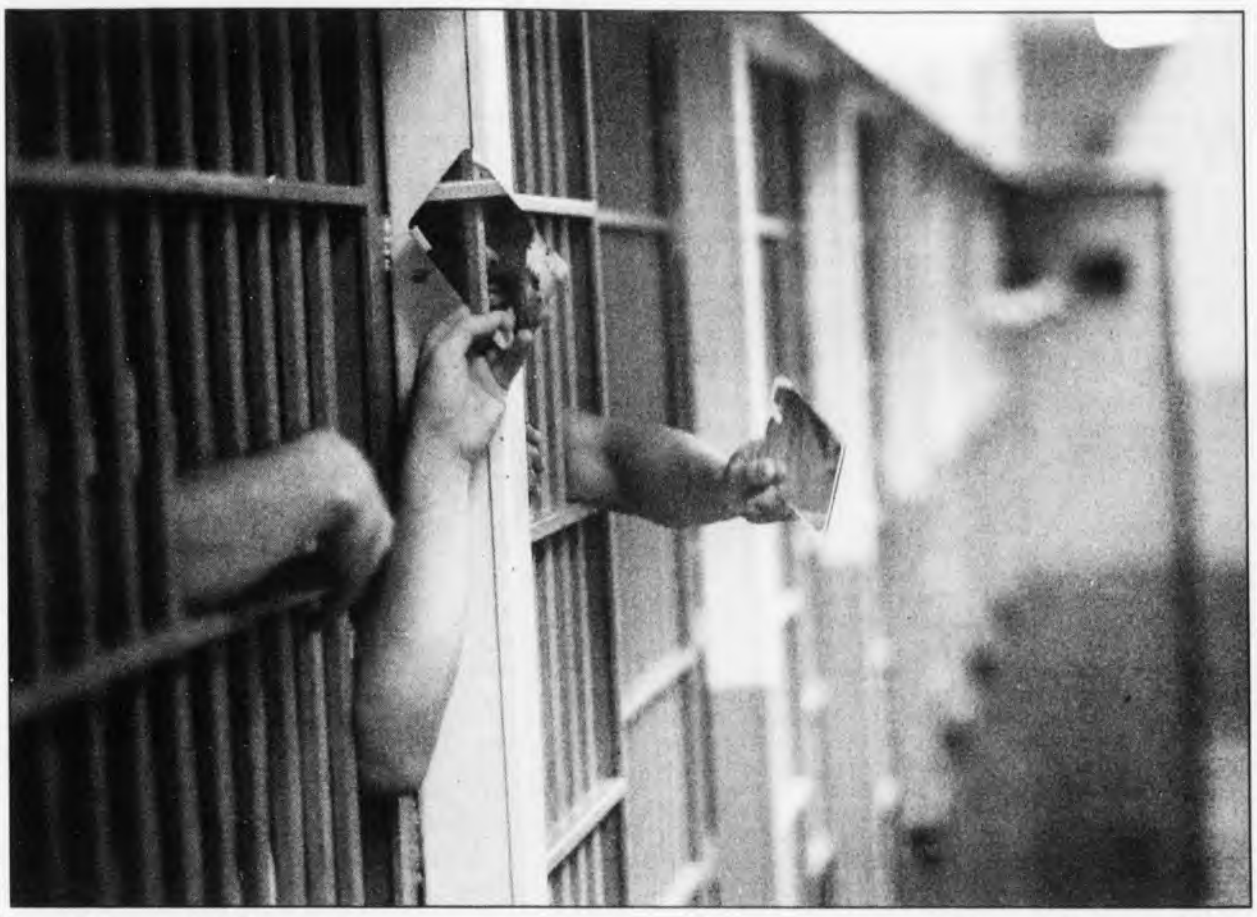
The current penalty for trafficking more than a half-ounce of cocaine is a mandatory three years in jail. An ounce is worth five years behind bars.

There is disagreement in the drug treatment community itself over the likely impact of the bill, were it to pass.

There is ample evidence that the right type of treatment does help. But quality programs are few and far between.

Some observers have warned that without a major new funding source, the state may not be able to guarantee enough treatment programs to handle the flood of drug convicts should the question pass.

DAVID B. CARUSO



Should prisoners vote in state elections?

QUESTION 2 seeks to prohibit incarcerated felons from voting in state elections.

The Legislature has spoken. Now, voters will decide whether convicted felons in Massachusetts should be stripped of the right to vote.

Ballot Question 2 would amend the state's constitution and take away a right that only a few other states grant to prisoners.

Supporters of the ballot initiative believe inmates have forfeited the right.

"When someone breaks the laws of the Commonwealth, they should relinquish their right to vote," said state Rep. Marie Parente, D-Milford. "I don't think they should be able to vote and set policy."

Critics believe the measure sets a dangerous precedent.

"You can't start tampering with the (state) constitution," said state Sen. Cynthia Creem, D-Newton. "Otherwise, next week we'll have another group whose rights we decide to take away."

Before voters can weigh an amendment to the state constitution, the change must be approved by the Legislature during two consecutive sessions. The measure passed more than two years ago, when lawmakers voted in favor of the change by an almost 3-to-1 margin.

Now, a majority of Massachusetts voters would have to vote in favor of the ballot question before it can be written into law.

Stephen Saloom, an attorney with the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, said Question 2 would only bar prisoners from voting in statewide elections and wouldn't prevent them from casting a ballot in municipal or federal races.

"I would like to see it amended," Parente said of the initiative. "I'm still in favor of it, but I'm sorry it limits it to certain positions in government. That's only the first step."

Only two other states, Vermont and Maine, allow inmates to vote. Parente considers it a dubious distinction, but Creem thinks it speaks highly of Massachusetts.

"I think everyone has an obligation to vote, and I take that very seriously," she said. "I think this became an issue where (legislators) wanted to show that they are tough on crime. But it's not a meaningful thing. It's not going to deter someone from committing a crime."

Because prisoners vote by absentee ballot, the state can't keep track of how many inmates are registered voters, according to a spokesman for Secretary of State's office.

MICHAEL KUNZELMAN

Should greyhound racing be legal?

QUESTION 3 seeks to ban greyhound racing in Massachusetts.

Animal rights activists say residents should vote their conscience when they decide whether Massachusetts should continue to be one of 16 states that allows greyhound racing.

If passed, ballot Question 3 would make the state the seventh to ban betting at dog tracks, and the first to close raceways still in business.

Grey2K, the group that put Question 3 on the ballot, said the ban is needed to stop thousands of dogs from being abused and killed in the racing industry each year.

"Greyhound racing is by its very nature cruel and inhumane," said group spokesman Carey Theil.

Supporters of the ban said between 7,000 and 20,000 greyhounds are killed every year nationwide when they are injured or become too slow to race. They claim Massachusetts feeds the slaughter by sending its aging dogs to out-of-state tracks where euthanasia is common.

They also claim that dogs are caged and muzzled 20 hours a day, physically abused, malnourished and neglected at Massachusetts tracks.

Those charges have sparked outraged denials by the state's two track owners, Charles Sarkis of Wonderland in Revere and Raynham Taunton Greyhound Park's George Carney.

Glenn Totten, the spokesman for the track owners, said the activists' allegations are fabricated or based on abuses that happen in other parts of the world – not in Massachusetts.

"These are the same people who are saying that cows are held prisoner on dairy farms," Totten said. "They are extremists who have traveled to Massachusetts to do this because it is easier to get on the ballot here than in other states."

Owners of the state's two tracks, Wonderland and Raynham Taunton, say they will be forced to close if Question 3 passes. Track owners say the closures would eliminate around 2,000 full- and part-time jobs.

The move to ban greyhound tracks is not unique to Massachusetts.

Maine, Vermont, Idaho, Washington, Virginia and Nevada have all outlawed greyhound tracks in the past several years, either because of animal cruelty concerns or anti-gambling sentiments.

Current state laws don't usually open up dog breeding farms to regular inspections, but the tracks are overseen by the state's racing commission.

Official charges of abuse have been exceedingly rare. Activists, however, claim enough circumstantial evidence has surfaced to show a pattern of abuse.

Nine starving greyhounds were discovered abandoned in January at a defunct Raynham dog farm. Eight died in a fire at the Wonderland kennel in June, bringing the total killed in 13 years of fires there to 120.

Official state statistics claim that between 60 and 90 racing greyhounds are euthanized each year – largely because of racing injuries or illness – but activists say the number is much higher.

Should tax deductions be given for charitable donations?

QUESTION 7 provides a state income tax deduction for charitable donations made by Massachusetts taxpayers.

Non-profit agencies and some of the state's largest financial-services firms are urging voters to approve a state tax deduction for charitable giving, saying it will increase philanthropy in Massachusetts.

In fact, the Legislature apparently agrees, having already passed an almost identical measure with this year's state budget.

Question 7 would enable Bay State residents to deduct cash and non-monetary donations they give to churches, charities and other non-profit firms from their state income tax forms, as they already are able to do on the federal level.

Unlike the federal form, Massachusetts taxpayers would not have to fill out an itemized tax return to claim the state deduction.

Massachusetts is not breaking new ground here. Already, 42 other states offer a similar deduction, and proponents say the measure will boost charitable giving in Massachusetts.

The state currently ranks near the bottom in some national surveys of per capita donations to charitable causes.

Coleman Nee, the spokesman for the group supporting Question 7, says the tax deduction would reduce state tax revenues by about $170 million, but spur an additional $220 million in charitable donations.

Opponents of Question 7 say the change would create a "tax loophole" for corporations and wealthy taxpayers who form charitable non-profit foundations, and also apply to donations made by Massachusetts residents to out-of-state causes.

State Sen. Michael Morrissey, D-Quincy, an opponent, also notes that firms like Fidelity Investments could benefit from the increase in business to so-called "donor-advised" mutual funds – which invest donations in stocks and bonds until the money is given to charities.

Backers of the measure note that such funds actually increase the amount of money that winds up helping needy causes.

Fidelity Investments, which owns Community Newspaper Co., donated at least $260,000 to support Question 7.

There is one difference between the Legislature's newly enacted law and the proposal in Question 7.

The legislative version says the state deduction must mirror federal limits, which puts a cap at 50 percent of gross income.

There is no such limit in the ballot question, but supporters say the Legislature would likely make its previously approved version the final law if Question 7 is passed.

Should legislative districts be redrawn

QUESTION 1 seeks to amend the state Constitution to redraw state legislative districts two years earlier using new census data.

The least controversial of all the state ballot questions, Question 1 seeks to amend the state Constitution for what amounts to a technical change.

Under current law, redrawn House and Senate seats in the Legislature take effect four years after the federal Census. That's two years after Congressional seats are redesigned under redistricting.

Question 1 seeks to make legislative redistricting take place at the same time as Congressional redistricting.

Supporters argue that the change will ensure that legislative districts more accurately reflect population changes and do away with a two-year lag.

"If the amendment passes, Census 2000 figures will be used for the 2002 election," wrote state Rep. Thomas Petrolati, the chairman of the House Committee on Redistricting. "If this amendment is not adopted, we will be using redistricting data which will be up to 14 years out of date."

No one has organized opposition to Question 1, and supporters say the current two-year lag in redistricting State House seats will likely be challenged in court if the amendment fails.

Incumbent Delahunt says there's still plenty of work ahead

With a huge freighter commanding the view outside, Adm. Maurice J. Bresnahan remembered his thoughts before travelling to the country's capital to ask for a new training vessel for the Massachusetts Maritime Academy two years ago.

"If you want a friend in Washington, bring a dog," Bresnahan said.

In this case, the admiral said, that old adage wasn't true.

Even though the request came in at the end of the budgetary session, U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, D-Mass., managed to secure Congressional approval for a $25 million vessel to replace The Patriot State. The Enterprise will be retrofitted for the education and training of 600 cadets.

Delahunt sidestepped the thanks and said it was something that had to be done, considering the MMA is the largest in the country and the only one that is growing.

If elected, which many consider a sure thing, Delahunt will be serving his third term. In supporters' eyes, he is characterized as seeing the importance of national and international affairs, and realizing that environmental, business and fishing concerns go beyond district boundaries.

"We live in a global economy," Delahunt said.

At the same time he is lauded for taking care of his district by bringing in federal dollars, including $1 million to dredge Aunt Lydia's Cove in Chatham, and $800,000 to create Packetts Landing Park along the Bass River in Yarmouth. He is also credited with effecting local policy by publishing four reports on price disparities for prescription drugs on Cape and Islands and assisting local businesses caught in the international crossfire of the so-called "banana trade war."

Although his list of accomplishments is long, when asked what stands out most in his mind, Delahunt spoke of a matter that has been given little attention.

He worked to secure another $10 million to research Fragile X syndrome, the most common genetic cause of mental retardation. The Quincy native said the studies will have enormous implications for autism as well.

"We are on the verge of an incredible breakthrough," he said. The syndrome, and the need for additional funding, was brought to his attention by a constituent.

"In the larger expanse of a budget that exceeds a trillion dollars it is miniscule, but has such enormous consequences," he said, adding it was successes like that that justify every effort made in public service.

"These things have ripples long after you are gone," said

That is what Delahunt is in public service for, the ripples. The chance to get things done.

Delahunt, 59, considers himself a Big "D" Democrat and holds Harry Truman, Jack Kennedy and John Quincy Adams among his heroes.

He is no stranger to politics. He was elected to the Quincy City Council just shy of 30. The Quincy native then served in the state House of Representatives before settling in to a long career as district attorney in Norfolk County.

Delahunt and his Republican challenger Eric Bleicken are alike in one respect. The two believe the judicial system needs some work. Delahunt is working to that end and co-sponsored the "Sunshine in the Courtroom Act," which would give judges from the Supreme Court to federal district courts discretion to permit televised broadcasts of court proceedings.

The idea is to increase confidence in criminal justice system, respect the requirements of due process and enhance the public's right to know while protecting the privacy of trial participants.

Delahunt's first Congressional race was his toughest and the closest. A recount and a judge's decision had to declare him the winner over fellow Democrat Phil Johnston. Delahunt then beat Republican Ed Teague.

Even as a freshman Congressman, Delahunt took the lead on a number of issues, including the Massachusetts Military Reservation. After spending months in background meetings, Delahunt took a stand and said that Camp Edwards should become a wildlife and water refuge.

"You have to meet the responsibility of looking forward," Delahunt said.

"Don't compromise."

Recently, Delahunt worked with Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., last October to repeal an anti-environmental rider buried in a $268 billion defense bill. It prohibited the Pentagon from paying fines assessed by the Justice Department or state enforcement officials for environmental violations on military sites, in the absence of explicit congressional authorization.

A former Guardsman, and chair of the House Coast Guard Caucus, Delahunt is particularly pleased with his success in securing $700 million in emergency Coast Guard funding.

"That was just incredible," he said.

And he had one of his favorite daughters, Kara, with him when President Bill Clinton signed Delahunt's bill that confers automatic U.S. citizenship on children adopted from abroad and on other foreign-born children of American parents. Kara was adopted from Vietnam under Operation Babylift, just days before the fall of Saigon. Clinton gave her the pen. (Delahunt's other favorite daughter is Kirsten.)

A sign of Delahunt's bipartisanship is evident when one scans the list of legislators who helped make the adoption treaty happen – one is Republican Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina.

William Delahunt

Although he works with his Republican counterparts, he often disagrees with them. He would also like to serve under Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Missouri, if the Democrats gain control of Congress and Gephardt becomes Speaker of the House.

Regarding the presidential race, Delahunt said that the tax cut proposed by Republican candidate George W. Bush is "really dangerous" and will cause the economy to weaken and fray on the edges.

"I don't think his vision is healthy," he said, adding that the national debt should be paid down.

Delahunt also pioneered a new concept in health care for veterans by providing a satellite clinic in Hyannis. He had heard from many local vets that they couldn't get to the facilities in Brockton or Providence. Satellite clinics are now in the works for three other towns in his district.

He spends a lot of time listening to constituents and then working for them. On a cranberry bog in Bourne, grower Peter Baptiste watched in something akin to astonishment while Delahunt asked questions about the grower's predicament, rattled off some recent health studies on the benefits of cranberries, and asked how he could help in the international arena by establishing new markets.

Baptiste said he was excited by Delahunt's attitude.

If elected, Delahunt hopes to create new markets for domestic products and work further on health care issues, as well as make sure the vision of the upper 15,000 acres of MMR as a refuge comes to fruition. One of his major concerns in the next couple of years is the increasing growth his district is experiencing. That growth puts pressure on everything: schools, safety infrastructure, affordable housing, water, transportation, and open space.

"There is so much to do," he said.

Bleicken stands for military might, family rights

Eric Bleicken admits he has little name recognition, but the former Navy Seal is far from acknowledging that he doesn't have a chance against incumbent Congressman William Delahunt.

"My sense is there are a lot of Democrats who are embarrassed. They won't vote for me, but they will stay home and watch football," Bleicken said of the election on Nov. 7. "I think I can beat the man."

Two years ago, Bleicken, a resident of Yarmouth, ran against Delahunt and garnered close to 30 percent of the vote. Bleicken believes he can push that percentage over the halfway mark by reaching out to more people and pointing out the differences between the two candidates.

And there are many.

"My opponent and I are on opposite ends of the political spectrum on nearly every issue," said Bleicken, a home-building contractor.

Bleicken is a conservative Republican and a great admirer of his old boss, Ronald Reagan. The Vietnam veteran with a technological background was appointed to the Defense Advance Research Projects Agency by the former president.

Bleicken wants to privatize Social Security and take government out of education, families, businesses and finances.

STAFF PHOTO/BARRY DONAHUE

Eric Bleicken.

"The Department of Energy produces no energy ... the Department of Education produces no education," he said, adding that they, and other superfluous government agencies, have huge budgets.

He said the state MCAS tests are orchestrating failure so the state can come in and take over education. Putting what children are going to learn in the hands of the government is not a good thing, Bleicken said. School vouchers and home schooling would force schools to compete and are something he supports.

The government should also get out of the affordable housing business and let private sector handle it. A big reason there is such a housing shortage on the Cape is because the land bank pushing up the price of land, he said.

On the other hand, the self-employed contractor wants the government to stop shirking its duties when it comes to national defense.

He said the military has been treated shabbily by the current administration and morale is low. The "social experiments" that have taken place with gays in the military and women in combat has just made the situation worse.

Soldiers on peace-keeping missions and other deployments are kept away from their families for far too long, he said. And since the administration is unwilling to have any casualties, fighter pilots are firing missiles from 30 miles away, and missing.

"The warrior is never allowed to engage; never allowed to win," Bleicken said.

Bleicken is firmly behind upgrading the PAVE PAWS facility in Sandwich and believes Delahunt's plan to have the upper 15,000 acres of the Massachusetts Military Reservation set aside as a wildlife and water refuge is way off-base.

"I don't want to send my son or daughter into battle having trained with plastic bullets and video games," he said. Bleicken added that the military is cleaning up what it needed to, and the reason the land is ecologically important is because of the National Guard's presence.

The real environmental threat, Bleicken said, is chemical warfare. He said most of the environmental problems, including clean air and clean water, have been solved. What hasn't been looked at, he said, are terrorists using biological and chemical weapons.

Just 300 pounds of anthrax dumped out of a small cargo plane flying up the Eastern seaboard would have the same effect as several nuclear bombs.

"Our first order of business is to make sure this nation and this culture will exist," he said.

Bleicken said there need to be installations set up to address these problems and have antidotes created. The MMR would be a great place to start one.

Americans should worry about chemical weapons instead of "5 parts per billion of lead in the water," he said.

Bleicken also said that Congress has turned a blind eye to energy needs. He said that the United States has become too dependent on volatile overseas markets. Opening up George's Bank to drilling could solve this international dependence, he said, and also bring back the Quincy shipyard.

Oil rigs do not harm the environment or fish stocks, he said. Their presence would in fact help fishermen for safety reasons because of helicopters located on each rig.

Bleicken said he has been speaking to a number of fishermen and believes they are being hurt by faulty science. Fishermen are too often left out of regulatory decisions and left to work against rules instituted by outsiders. If elected, he would ask to be a member of the fisheries subcommittee, and have a fisherman on his staff.

He also finds fault with Congress for allowing Clinton to write too many executive orders. The president has stepped around the legislative body too many times, he said.

Furthermore, Congress should have impeached Clinton, he said, for high crimes and misdemeanors. The Constitution was clear on that matter, Bleicken said.

"They don't have any wiggle room," he said.

The 59-year-old believes God and morality issues should be put back into the schools and that the Constitution should not be a document that is just mentioned – it should be studied.

The family should be strengthened by eliminating the marriage penalty and banning abortion, Bleicken said.

He entered politics because of family issues. He believed the courts are unfair to men in divorce settlements and has spent the better half of 10 years fighting the system for himself, and now for others. Bleicken has a 15-year-old son, Matthias, and two older daughters.

In 1979, he ran unsuccessfully for Congress in New Hampshire and then worked for Howard Phillips, the head of the U.S. Taxpayers Party, at the Conservative Caucus in Washington. He also ran against state Sen. Henri Rauschenbach in 1996, but again, he came up short.

Bleicken said he has found support on the local level, but none from the state.

"The state party has systemic problems," he said. "The real problem is that nothing is coming from Boston."

With $8,000 in his war chest (compared to Delahunt's close to $800,000), Bleicken is behind the eight-ball monetarily, but his message is more important than money. And if he loses, he still would have performed a public service.

"I'm right," Bleicken said. "At least I would have said what I needed to say."

Hedlund, Cantwell square off for State Senate seat

Name: Robert L. Hedlund
Age: 39
Occupation: Full-time state senator.
Political Involvement: Currently serves on several legislative committees including Senate Ways and Means, Commerce and Labor, Federal Financial Assistance, Post Audit and Oversight, Government Regulations, and Transportation.
Community Service: Weymouth Lodge of Elks #2232, Sons of Italy, South Shore Elder Services Advisory Council, Massachusetts Water Resource Authority (MWRA), (Citizens Advisory Council, City of Quincy Mayor Sheets' Maritime Advisory Council.
Three Top Issues facing the South Shore:
1. Health Care Issues: Seniors (prescription costs), children (medical security plan).
2. Improving Education: Making it easier for towns to fund school projects, attracting quality teachers to the district, improve student/teacher ratio and classroom technology.
3. Greenbush/Naval Air Station Redevelopment: Greenbush and Greenbush mitigation issues, quality of life issues (diesel fuel pollutants), burden to taxpayers, Naval Air Station, traffic impacts, water supply and quality.

c. Easter Seal Society of Massachusetts, House of Delegates (1988-present) (Volunteer coordinator of annual Easter Seal Marathon Softball Fundraiser, 1994-present)
d. President and co-founder, The Daniel Webster Preservation Trust (1990 - present)
e. Vice-president and co-founder, The Back River Watershed Association (1999-2000)
f. Past chair, Hugh O'Brian Youth Leadership Foundation, Alumni Association
g) Jordan Hospital Advisory Board Member
h) Marshfield Conservation Commissioner (1994-1996)
The Three Top Issues Facing the South Shore:
1. Protecting the character of our communities: Our region is truly at risk. We are experiencing growth and change at a phenomenal pace that threatens to overwhelm our communities with gridlock — and which jeopardizes our open spaces, water quality, and historical districts. I have a record of fighting to protect the quality of life of our region, whether it be working to defeat the Clean Harbors incinerator in Weymouth, founding the Back River Watershed Association, battling to prevent contamination of Duxbury Bay, and preserving the historic Webster Estate in Marshfield.
2. Education: A strong public education system is the economic engine for the commonwealth. However, the future of education reform as we have come to know it is currently in jeopardy — and will be decided by the next legislative assembly that meets in January of 2001. As the son of a life-long teacher, I have a deep understanding of the needs of our public education system — and can personally attest to the significant advances that communities have been able to make in education services as a result of the seven-year partnership that the Education Reform Act of 1994 created.
3. Health Care: As a Congressional aide to U.S. Rep. Bill Delahunt, I worked to expose the high cost of pharmaceutical drugs for senior citizens, fought to maintain home health services and battled with insurance companies to provide life-sustaining treatment for South Shore residents.

Three-way race for state representative

Garrett Bradley

Name: Garrett Bradley
Age: 30
Occupation: Attorney, Thornton & Naumes, LLP
Residence: 74 Hersey Streak Hingham
Family: Wife, Heather, and daughter, Amanda, 13 months
Political Involvement:
1998 Democratic nominee for state representative, 3rd Plymouth District
Assistant District Attorney, Plymouth County, 1995-1998
Community Service:
Wellspring Multi-service Center, Hull
Lecturer, Hingham Citizens Police Academy
Hingham Playground Committee
Hingham Democratic Town Committee
Children's Champion Network
Capital Outlay Committee, Hingham
Hingham Youth Football Coach
Friends of the Paragon Carousel, Hull
Hingham Education Foundation
Three top issues facing the South Shore:
Healthcare
We need to fight to bring prescription drug and healthcare costs to reasonable levels. For many elderly residents on fixed incomes, the costs are so extreme that they can either not afford to buy the medicine they need or are forced to forego other necessities to pay their medical bills. This is not right. I support the expansion of prescription drug assistance to the elderly in order to help curb these exorbitant costs, and I will fight for a Patients Bill of Rights and more positive steps toward reasonable healthcare for all.
Education
I believe that government must provide a high quality education for all our children. Through creative solutions, proper funding, and a steadfast commitment, each child can have access to an education that prepares them for a bright future. As a state representative, I will fight to make sure the state maintains its investment in our public education system, through increased funding, low class sizes and high classroom standards. I have proposed sending a portion of our state's tobacco settlement money back to local communities to be used for educational purposes. Also, I will work with local businesses and community groups to provide internships and after-school jobs for our young people, as well as promote constructive after-school programs for our youngsters.
Quality of Life
The 3rd Plymouth District is a special place to live and raise a family. In order to preserve this wonderful sense of community, particularly our beautiful shoreline, we must address traffic and development issues with public input and effective planning. As state representative, I will be as active voice for our community at all levels. I would also like to see more tax dollars earmarked to local projects in our district. Our parks, recreation, historic and open spaces need to be preserved for future generations to enjoy.

Mary Anne McKenna

Name: Mary Anne McKenna
Age: 35
Occupation: Pharmaceutical research consultant for Glaxo-Wellcome
Residence: 6'70 Main Street, Hingham
Family: Daughter Maeve (10)
Education: Graduate of Hingham High School, 1982, B.A. in English, Master of Education in Counseling, both from Univ. of MA, Boston, Certificate in Spanish Language, 'University of Seville, Spain.
The following are what I consider to be the top issues facing, the South Shore:
1 . The lowest and worst use for the South Weymouth. Naval Air Station property is a mega-mall. I am working on what I believe would be the highest and better use of the land, with a visionary solution to regional problems.
2. The focus on constituent services and fiscal accountability to the taxpayers.
3. Providing our children with a quality education, with accountability to ensure delivery of results.
As the only candidate born and raised in Hingham, and a life-long beneficiary of all the South Shore has to offer, I would consider it a privilege to represent this district on Beacon Hill. Although I have held no paid, public office, I am a fresh, new face not compromised by any political agenda. ! believe that my dedication to community service over the past 20 years is indicative of my ability and my heart-felt desire to contribute to the betterment of Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset.
- founding member of St. Paul's Youth Program. This organization has brought greater meaning to the lives of more than 5,000 high school students from Hingham and. surrounding communities.
- -Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham — organized businesses, family, and friends to provide support for homeless mothers and children.
- Volunteer counselor at Quincy Hospital's Center for Emotional Health providing counseling services to senior citizens.
- Volunteer teacher at the University of Massachusetts — teaching English as a second language to Spanish-speaking students.
- Volunteer tennis instructor to underprivileged children.
- Volunteer fundraiser for the American Legion in Cohasset to benefit the Cohasset High School Scholarship fund.
- Volunteer with the Friends of the Homeless Program in Hingham to secure housing for homeless families. Classroom volunteer at South School in Hingham which my daughter attends.
These volunteer services were performed in private, without an eye on holding public office. My reason for doing this work, is the same as my reason for entering the field of counseling: I care about our community and its people, and want to be involved. I hope you believe as I do, that public service is where I can be most effective.
We all know that our communities will always be faced with change, but we can handle change if we continue to ask ourselves, "What do we want to become? And how do we get there?" Getting there requires consensus-building; bringing people in. opposition together. This is the most important quality in a state representative. I view myself as a consensus-builder, and through my work I attempt to define issues which separate people and work toward compromise and resolution. My campaign is about building such relationships and partnerships designed to promote community cohesiveness and community pride. Believe me when I say I am motivated and energized, and if elected, I am going to give you a legislator who will devote herself to this job full-time.

Three top issues facing the South Shore:
Issue No. 1: "Lower Water Rates by Terminating Massachusetts-American Water Company's Control Over the Public Supply of Water"
Ever since the Massachusetts-American Water Company ("MAWC") took control over the public supply of water, water rates in our district have increased dramatically by more than 155 percent. According to one report, the average annual water bill for individual ratepayers in the district has soared to approximately $713. The water rate paid in our district is now considered to be one of the highest in the nation.
As a candidate for state representative, I have researched this issue and have consulted with industry engineers and professionals alike. The general consensus amongst industry leaders is that municipalities can reduce water rates by at least 30 percent by switching from a "private" supply of water to a "public" supply of water. The basis for this conclusion is that costs related to the private supply of water include marketing costs and taxes, not to mention the fact that a company is controlled by a profit-driven home office. The supply of water by a public municipality, on the other hand, has no marketing or tax-related costs and, more importantly, is not profit driven.
When it comes to the supply of water for our district, the above economic argument holds true. The MAWC has both marketing and tax-related costs to contend with and, as a subsidiary of American Water Works Company, Inc., located in Vorhees, N.J., MAWC is controlled by a profit-driven home office.
The most compelling reason to me for wanting to terminate the control of our district's water supply by MAWC is not, however, an economic one. Rather, it is a matter of public interest.
Legal documents submitted by the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset to the Department of Public Utilities ("DPU"; now the Department of Telecommunications and Energy) contesting rate increases are replete with arguments and evidence indicating that MAWC was unreasonable, inept and lacking in genuine community concern during the design, permitting, engineering, and construction phases of the new water treatment plant.
For example, the company outright admitted that the more than $10,000,000 cost overruns resulted in, "... a higher cost than that generally experienced in other water treatment facility projects." Some inflated construction costs for the plant include $820,000 for poor site selection, $615,000 for unnecessary permits, and $200,000 for unnecessary precast concrete panels. Most costly to the project, however, is MAWC's failure to engage in a competitive contract bidding process. In awarding the construction contract to Bec-Mor, the DPU concluded that, "... the circumstances which led to the selection of Bec-Mor leave the Company [MAWC] open to criticism that its negotiation processes may not produce the most cost-effective price for ratepayers." Lastly, the DPU determined there was validity to the argument that MAWC was less, ". . . responsive to both its ratepayers and local agencies."
The primary role of any elected official is to protect the public interest. In my view, when it comes to the issue of water supply and the Massachusetts-American Water Company, I believe our elected officials have dropped the ball. Although Sen. Bob Hedlund's efforts in obtaining federal and state aid to mitigate construction costs should be commended, any long-term plan designed to significantly reduce water rates in our district must include the termination of Massachusetts-American Water Company's control over the supply of our district's water.
Issue No. 2: "Provide Adequate State and Federal Funding for Special Needs Educational Programs"
Currently there is much fear and concern in the commonwealth over the potential negative impact on special needs education due to a shift in education from the state "maximum feasible benefits" standard to the federal "free and appropriate public education" standard. Regardless of the standard that is applied, the responsibility of the next state representative is clear — to fight for and provide adequate funding for special needs educational programs in our district.
Because special needs education funding is a budget buster for most local towns, I raised the importance of this issue during the 1998 state representative race (before the current debate on Beacon Hill took place). To date, I still remain committed to this issue.
In fiscal 1999, educational expenses in Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset accounted for nearly half of each town's budgetary outlays. Hingham's educational expenses accounted for 49.02 percent of all total expenditures; Hull's education expenses accounted for 45.48 percent of all total expenditures; and, Cohasset's education expenses accounted for 48.94 percent of all total expenditures. Hingham's cost of special needs education for this year alone increased more than their overall budget increase of 6.09 percent. Cohasset experienced a $160,000 shortfall in their special needs education budget. Cohasset's budget constraints were so severe that they had to eliminate some athletic programs. Hull is also experiencing tight budgetary constraints in education.
My concern is, and has been since the outset of the 1998 campaign, that there has been no leadership in the House of Representatives on key committees such as the House Committee on Education. If elected, I will seek out such leadership roles in order to provide the necessary educational resources that our district deserves.
Issue No. 3: "Reduce Automobile Insurance Rates for Hull Residents"
Despite the fact that Hingham and Cohasset reported more automobile accidents last year than Hull (Hingham as much as four times as many accidents than Hull), Hull residents continue to pay approximately 28 percent more for auto insurance than do Hingham and Cohasset residents.
In my view, this issue is one that has been sorely neglected by our elected officials. While the auto insurance industry seeks yearly rate increases, elected officials in the district remain silent on the issue. If elected, I'll seek to promote more equitable rate-setting formularies for Hull residents.

Local residents given electoral honor

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

So who has the real power in deciding whom the next president is going be?
If Vice-President Al Gore wins it will partly be because of Fred Koed of Pleasant Street.
And if Texas Governor George W. Bush wins, he can thank Polly Logan of Nichols Road.
No, Logan and Koed aren't following in the footsteps of legendary vote-producer, the late Chicago Major Richard Daley, who is widely credited with swinging the Illinois vote for John F. Kennedy in his 1960 victory. Koed and Logan have been tabbed official "electors" as part of the Electoral College representing Massachusetts. It's the Electoral College that decides who the next commander-in-chief is, not the popular vote.
Each party in this year's presidential race has a slate of 12 electors from Massachusetts in a winner-take all race based on the popular vote. If Gore wins Massachusetts, as he is expected to do, he will win the state's 12 electoral votes. A candidate needs 270 electoral votes to win the presidency. The number of electoral votes a state has is based on the number of senators and representatives the state has in Congress. Massachusetts has 10 representatives and two senators.
Surprisingly, this is first time in Logan's long political career that she has been chosen as an elector. "I'd never sought to be one before," said Logan, who topped the ticket in the voting for electors. "I always tried to give it to other people." A long-time member of the state Republican party where she serves as vice-chairman, she also was involved with the National Republican Committee for a while. Traditionally, Logan had pushed giving the honor to either a young person in the party, or a long-time party faithful. This time, it was given to party-faithful Logan. "I feel like one of the Apostles' 12," she said with a laugh.
Koed, a town selectman, also is a party-faithful, but on the Democratic side. He said he decided to make a run at the nomination in April and began sending out letters lobbying for committee members' support. "I ran on the commitment that I would not ever run for elector again in the future," he said. The commitment must have worked, because at the party's annual convention in July, Koed picked up one of the 12 seats.

Democrat Fred Koed of Cohasset will cast his vote for Al Gore should the vice president win Massachusetts.

"I consider this something of a very high honor from the state party," he said.
On Dec. 13, after the popular vote has been held and the winner has been decided, the electors will gather in the Senate Chamber in the State House for a formal vote. The results will be sent to a judge for certification, and also to Washington D.C., where on Jan. 6 the Electoral College will take place. There is no federal law saying Koed and Logan have to vote for Gore or Bush, but you can be certain they will. "That's part of the honor of being up there, that the state party can trust you to carry forward their duty," said Koed. Logan said not only has she had a Bush sticker on her car since "long before anyone else," she threw George H. Bush's first campaign party in Massachusetts when he ran for president in 1980. She also has thrown parties for former Secretary of Transportation Andrew Card, a Holbrook native and Bush family friend, and three separate receptions for former first lady Barbara Bush. "I've been a long time supporter of the whole family," she said. Historically, electors have gone against the popular vote just a dozen times.
The Electoral College has come under fire for years because, technically, a candidate could lose the popular vote, but win the Electoral College and become the president.

Republican Polly Logan, shown here with Gov. Paul Cellucci, will cast her electoral vote for Texas Gov. George W. Bush if he takes the state.

Koed and Logan differ in their opinions of the long-term usefulness of the Electoral College.
Logan thinks it has outlived its usefulness. "I think the more democratic way is to have one vote for a candidate be one vote for a candidate," she said.
Koed quoted former British Prime Minister Winston Churchill: "It's the worst system of all except for all the other ones."
He said since he has been named an elector he has read up on the system's history. "Arguments against [the Electoral College] don't really hold up when you look at what's happened historically," he said. Koed pointed to the fact that some states used to not even hold popular votes for the president, and let its state legislature's decide, such as Missouri did in 1860. But he conceded, "If this is a close race [between Gore and Bush] there will be a lot of discussion about what we can do to modify the Electoral College."
A candidate has lost the popular vote but won the electoral vote three times in the nation's history: in 1824 with Quincy native John Quincy Adams, 1876 with Rutherford B. Hayes, and 1888 with Benjamin Harrison. Interestingly, all three presidents, were one-term presidents. Will Gore or Bush continue the trend?

Hedlund, Cantwell swap barbs at debate

known before then.

"I have spent over 10 years supporting responsible growth on the South Shore. I believe this is irresponsible growth," Cantwell said. "We are getting Greenbush to relieve traffic. Mills will bring 55,000 to 60,000 cars. What I would do would be bring business leaders together to find an alternative."

Cantwell then charged Hedlund with flip-flopping on the mall issue.

Hedlund had been a member of the original reuse committee, the 33-member Naval Air Station Planning Committee (predecessor of the SSTTDC), when the panel voted to enter into exclusive negotiations with Mills.

Hedlund said he spoke out as soon as data was generated that indicated to him that the mall would undermine life quality on the South Shore.

Hedlund said he was the first voice on Beacon Hill to oppose the mall.

"A lot of the data we have now was not available then," Hedlund said. "I stepped aside from my legislative colleagues who supported the mall. I broke away from the pack."

Gun control sparked an exchange of verbal shots between Hedlund and Cantwell.

Hedlund said the state needed tougher laws aimed at criminals, not at law-abiding gun owners.

"I have supported tougher measures," Hedlund said, citing legislation he has filed that would penalize those who provide unlicensed firearms to minors.

"You are the poster boy for the NRA," Cantwell charged.

Cantwell said that, as an assistant district attorney, he had worked against the mail order sale of guns.

"I do believe in the right of a law-abiding citizen to own a gun, but we need to keep guns out of the hands of felons and minors," Cantwell said.

Hedlund, who supports restoration of the death penalty, said the issue caused him much personal conflict.

"I voted for it. You have to balance your personal feelings with the will of your district. This district overwhelmingly favors restoration of the death penalty," Hedlund said.

Cantwell said he opposed restoring the death penalty.

"I am speaking from my convictions," Cantwell said. "We can't make irrevocable decisions when we are fallible human beings."

Hedlund said he was pro life, while Cantwell said he was pro choice.

Both contenders said they advocated campaign finance reform.

"It costs about $100,000 to run for this office," Cantwell said. "Campaign finance reform allows candidates to spend their time talking to residents, rather than special interest groups."

Hedlund, noting that every time he has run for office his donations came mainly from individual people, said campaign finance reform would be good for his political party.

"It will create a level playing field for Republicans," Hedlund said.

The debate was moderated by Risa Nyman, former president of the Massachusetts League of Women Voters. Panelists from the media asking questions were Gregory Mathis, managing editor of the Marshfield Mariner, Cathy Conley, editor of the Weymouth News, and Aaron Katersky, news director at WATD.

Big turnout expected

that race.

"It's usually pretty good when the candidates are so close in the polls," Douglas said.

Other races of note include 36-year incumbent U.S. Senator Ted Kennedy seeking reelection against Libertarian candidate Carla Howell and Republican Jack E. Robinson, and U.S. Representative Bill Delahunt, D-Quincy, facing off against Republican Eric Bleicken.

Local candidates also expect a high voter turnout, and each hopes that results in more votes for them.

"I think there will be a strong voter turnout, especially with the presidential race, and all the attention this race has received," said Murray. "If the more conservative Democrats and moderate Republicans show up it will favor me. But if it's a low voter turnout, where only the party faithfuls come out, it will not favor me."

McKenna thinks her support is peaking at the right time, and expects a good showing at the polls. "I am very excited about the support I have seen, particularly in the past six weeks," she said. "A large voter turnout will send the message that voter apathy has dissipated, and people are concerned who their next leaders are going to be."

Bradley, who hopes to avenge his 1998 defeat at the hands of Rep. Murray, plans to keep the campaign going to the end. "I always expect a close race. I think it's very important people go out in the polls," he said. "I think it's going to be close."

State senate candidate Jim Cantwell thinks every vote will count, literally, in his race against Hedlund. "We think districts could be decided by ten votes or so," he said. "From what we've been seeing this could be a very close race, but that's what makes it exciting."

For Hedlund, a high voter turnout could either hurt or help him. He said in 1990, a high amount of unenrolled voters turned out to boost Republican William Weld over Democrat John Silber in the race for governor. The high unenrolled vote also gave Hedlund a boost, helping him win the state senate seat over Democrat Bob Ambler. However, Hedlund also said voter backlash in the 1992 presidential election against President George Bush did him in as well, as he lost to Democrat Brian McDonald. "It's a double-edged sword sometimes," he said.

As for this year, he wasn't sure if the presidential race would translate into big numbers at the polls. "The excitement doesn't seem to be gripping the electorate as much as it does in other states," he said. "A lower turnout means the more active voters who pay more attention, and I hope I'll be recognized as doing a good job. But with a big turnout, as the incumbent, I have the advantage of name recognition."

Voters will also get to vote on eight ballot questions ranging from a tax rollback, to the banning of greyhound racing in Massachusetts. But Douglas doesn't think voter turnout will be sparked by the questions. "It usually means they have to take longer to vote," she said. Voter guides explaining the ballot questions will be available at the polls.

In Precinct One, there are 735 registered Republicans, 572 Democrats, and 1,507 unenrolled voters. In Precinct Two, there are 561 registered Republicans, 575 Democrats, and 1,499 unenrolled voters. There is a total of 5,464 registered voters in Cohasset.

Absentee ballots available at Town Hall

Absentee ballots for the state election on Nov. 7 are now available at the town clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Nov. 6, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election.

You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open; physical disability; religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the town clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the town clerk's office by Nov. 7 to be counted.

Hingham Shipyard plans to enter next phase

Planners to make recommendation

By Carol Britton Meyer

An architect's rendering of the redeveloped Hingham Shipyard that calls for a more pedestrian-friendly waterfront; an improved commuter boat facility; 550 units of upscale housing geared towards empty-nesters, including 16-20 affordable units; an inn; supermarket; daycare center; improved marina facilities; and office space.

There have been dozens of public hearings on a proposal to redevelop the 129-acre Hingham Shipyard.

Traffic, parking, open space, affordable housing, water supply, impacts on the town's schools and services and a number of other issues have been considered.

Now, following a final hearing Monday — where open space, shared parking and the fiscal impact on the Town of Hingham were addressed — the Hingham Planning Board is nearly ready to make its recommendations to the Hingham Zoning Board of Appeals on the current proposal. A final development plan will be submitted at a later date.

"The shipyard development is a huge project for the Town of Hingham, impacting water, traffic and town services," said planning board chairman Sarah Corey. "It would constitute a 6 percent population increase in Hingham. I hope we can work it out in the best way for both the developer and the town."

The approximately 40 hearings held concerning the proposal have afforded "ample opportunity to discuss the issues," she stated.

Corey also had some good news to share. This week, Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) announced that the town will receive a $1 million Public Works Economic Development Grant to relocate and reconstruct Shipyard Drive, which runs through the property, from Route 3A. (See related story).

The $150-million mixed-use redevelopment plan calls for a more pedestrian-friendly waterfront; an improved commuter boat facility; 550 units of upscale housing geared towards empty-nesters, including 16-20 affordable units; an inn; supermarket; daycare center; improved marina facilities; and office space. The market-rate living units would likely sell for $450,000 or more.

Richard Cook of the SeaChain Inc. development team defined which portions of the property would be earmarked as open space, including private areas with swimming pools and clubhouses; locations suitable for either private or public passive recreational use and landscaping.

The town bylaws mandate that 15 percent of the property remain in the "open space" category. According to Cook, that requirement has been slightly exceeded.

A fiscal impact study performed by a real estate economist for developer Paul Trendowicz of Cohasset, who worked with Hingham Planning Board member Tod McGrath to come up with the projections, was also presented. The study took a look at the costs of such a development to the Town of Hingham, including impacts on schools and the fire and police departments.

According to the study, a fully redeveloped Hingham Shipyard would generate approximately $2.6 million annually in revenue. The cost impact on the schools, including projected operating and capital expenditures, and town services is estimated at about $950,000, which could leave a "surplus" of as much as $1.6 million in the town's coffers.

It's expected that between 45-90 more children could be added to the student population as a result of the development of the residential portion of the project. The lower figure reflects only the number of children that are likely to live in Shipyard housing without considering the indirect effect of those who might live in homes vacated by empty-nesters, which the higher number reflects.

"It would constitute a 6 percent population increase in Hingham. I hope we can work it out in the best way for both the developer and the town."

— Sarah Corey, Hingham Planning Board chairman

"This project is unparalleled in the town's development," said planning board member Paul Healey, who expressed concern about the possibility that some unforeseen costs could eventually surface.

While the study offers estimates, Trendowicz noted that whatever the surplus ultimately amounts to, "it would at least cover (the planning board's) concerns (about fiscal impacts of the project on the town)."

Richard Pedone of Sycamore Lane in Hingham urged the town to look forward 10-15 years and consider the possibility of decreased property values (which would affect tax revenue from the 550 housing units) should there be an economic downturn. The other side of the coin is that the values could go up in a thriving economy.

With regard to shared parking, Ed Pesce, a consulting engineer for Hingham, requested further analysis regarding the peak retail parking demand in December. The fact that marina activities would have reached a standstill by that time of year — thus requiring fewer parking spaces — is another factor to be considered.

The Town of Weymouth has requested that signalization at all the intersections affected by the redevelopment of the shipyard as well as the ones impacted by a large home goods store slated for nearby Harborlight Mall be coordinated. The shipyard developer agrees.

The Hingham Planning Board expects to make its recommendation about the shipyard proposal at its Monday, Nov. 13, meeting at 8:30 p.m.

$1M state grant boosts shipyard project

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Hingham Shipyard redevelopment plan received a financial shot in the arm Tuesday when the Town of Hingham received a $1 million state Public Works Economic Development grant to relocate and reconstruct Shipyard Drive from Rte. 3A. The project will improve traffic flow and access to the shipyard area and pave the way for creation of 850 new jobs, officials said.

"This is one piece of an economic strategy that has brought Massachusetts back, and part of a strategy that will keep our economy strong creating the jobs and the prosperity that will enable our citizens to have a good standard of living."

— Gov. Paul Cellucci

In a presentation to Hingham selectmen, Gov. Paul Cellucci, along with a number of state officials, told a packed room at the Department of Environmental Management's Waterways Department building at Hewitt's Cove, that the grant is proof of the state's commitment to rebuilding its infrastructure.

"This is part of the most massive rebuilding of infrastructure effort in the state's history," Cellucci said. According to the governor, the state has spent $18 billion over the past seven years in infrastructure improvements, and plans on spending another $17 billion over the next five years. "This is one piece of an economic strategy that has brought Massachusetts back, and part of a strategy that will keep our economy strong creating the jobs and the prosperity that will enable our citizens to have a good standard of living."

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who is a member of the Senate Ways and Means Committee and the Transportation Committee, said he has worked with Secretary of Transportation Kevin Sullivan and Massachusetts Highway Commissioner Matt Armorello to direct the funding for this economic project. The reconstruction of Shipyard Drive will help facilitate improved access to the Hingham Commuter Boat terminal, which is the largest park and ride facility in the state. Upwards of 1600 cars with Boston-bound commuters park at the Shipyard during the week. The parking facilities will be located closer to the ferry piers, Hedlund said. The relocation will allow for improved access to the site and improved traffic circulation to the businesses and commuter boat parking.

The $150 million mixed-use redevelopment plan for the 130-acre site, according to developer Paul Trendowicz of SeaChain LLC, calls for 550 units of housing, marina facilities, office space, a waterfront boardwalk, an improved commuter boat facility, and a reconfigured commuter boat parking lot.

Also at the check passing ceremony were state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, Transportation Secretary Sullivan, MassHighway Commissioner Amarello, and DEM Commissioner Peter Webber, Hingham town officials and Trendowicz.

Roadway and utility relocation will be a major component of the shipyard redevelopment resulting in the creation of hundreds of new jobs for the area, Hedlund said.

"This roadway improvement will not only help make commuters use of the Hingham ferry terminal easier, but will be a major boost to the local economy," he said. The plan will also include an affordable housing component and public access to the waterfront.

Hingham Selectmen Chairman Dr. Martin Crane said, "These funds will do exactly what the PWED grants were intended to do, by assisting in the development of the former shipyard."

Crane said the redevelopment plan will accomplish some of the goals the governor has been working towards such as new jobs, new and affordable housing, improved water transportation, waterfront access and provide an additional "needed" tax revenue base.

"This PWED grant, by providing improved access to the shipyard is really the beginning, the engine, that will start this project moving," he said. "It really will not only be a benefit to us, but the entire South Shore."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Cantwell for state senate

The race for state senate on the South Shore mirrors that of the presidential race; albeit on a very small stage. You have two solid candidates, who have pluses and minuses that stand out pretty significantly.

You have a Democrat who's smart, polished and seems to be overhandled by a political machine. Those who have known him through the years are surprised how negative he has gone in his effort to unseat the Republican.

The Republican is a bit of a maverick, clear on who he is and with him what you see is what you get. He's pretty direct and straightforward. He does seems to lack a clear vision of what he wants to accomplish in the next two years. He hasn't articulated as strong a command on specifics for some issues and has a reputation in parts of the district as not working hard enough.

Sound familiar?

This is not about Al Gore and George W. Bush but Democrat Jim Cantwell and Republican Bob Hedlund. Their race is certainly more interesting from a local level than the presidential one. And there is more at stake directly relating to South Shore residents.

Throughout the course of this election season we have had a unique front-row seat as the issues continued to unfold and Cantwell and Hedlund articulated their visions and plans for the South Shore. Each week we have featured our own stories on the issues, as well as providing space for the candidates to talk directly to you, our readers, about those issues. We've also hosted debates and have had one-on-one interviews with Hedlund and Cantwell.

After a long and thorough examination of the issues, the candidates and the future needs of the South Shore, we have concluded that Jim Cantwell represents the best voice for leadership and vision over the next term.

Our support of Cantwell came after long and heated exchanges among editors who, as a majority, ultimately decided he appears to be in the unique position to deliver for the South Shore. He is connected to the Democratic machine and as a member of the majority party, will be able to get things done over the next critical few years as the region considers several key issues — affordable housing, Greenbush rail restoration, continued education reform and redevelopment of the South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

The fact that he is part of a political machine bodes well for the area, like it or not. He has the ear of powerful Democrats and that should translate into action and funding for South Shore projects.

There are problems, however, in being associated with such a powerful Democratic machine. It doesn't allow for a two-party system in the state and gives power to a few. But at this critical juncture, that takes a back seat on the South Shore to local projects that demand leadership.

A lot is riding on the future and we are giving Cantwell the nod, but at the same time many of us will be holding him accountable should he win on Nov. 7. We urge him to be his own person and not let that same powerful political machine swallow him up. We have not seen the best parts of Jim Cantwell in this election, but his record of public service over the last 17 years shows his commitment and passion to the area and his ability to do well.

Senator Hedlund has been true to himself since he was first elected and we applaud that. He has helped deliver on some key initiatives in parts of the district. But we feel it is time for change and to have the entire South Shore benefit from the senate seat.

Bradley for the House

With long-time state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray stepping down, a three-way race opened up for the Cohasset Republican's seat. The general election was preceded by a hot primary race between Democrats Garrett Bradley and Michael Holden, both of Hingham.

Bradley handily won the primary and now squares off against Republican Mary Anne McKenna of Hingham and independent candidate Walter Murray of Hull on Nov. 7.

After covering the race extensively, hosting primary and general election debates, and hearing the candidates' views at our editorial board, we think Bradley will provide the best voice for the Third Plymouth District.

Bradley, who edged Hull selectman Josh Cutler and Walter Murray in the Democratic primary two years ago, faced Mary Jeanette Murray in the 1998 general election. In his three years of campaigning to represent us as state representative, Bradley has proved he can articulate a clear vision for the district on issues such as taxes, domestic violence and education. We think he will hit the ground running and be an effective representative on Beacon Hill.

The district was has been fortunate to have several people come forth to take the baton from Mary Jeannette Murray. With both the competitive primary and general election a thoughtful discourse on the issues emerged and voters were given ample opportunity to hear where the candidates stand on the issues.

Throughout the course of the campaign we were impressed with the growth and talent of Republican Mary Anne McKenna. She is an accomplished debater and orator, and we could visualize her on the floor of the House making a compelling case for or against a bill.

We also applaud Walter Murray for, once again, throwing his hat into the ring and bringing another perspective to the issues. It was clear all candidates care deeply about their district and learned a few lessons Mary Jeanette Murray about constituent service.

But with the critical issues facing us in the next term — including Greenbush mitigation, Logan runway expansion and redevelopment of the former Naval Air Station — we think Bradley can start on Day One advocating for our citizens.

Delahunt for re-election

Our congressional district is denied a vigorous and competitive race this year. But fortunately, we are graced with a strong and qualified incumbent who has proven his commitment to protect the South Shore and Cape Cod environment and enhance our region's critical health care.

Democratic Rep. William Delahunt has earned re-election to the U.S. Congress not only for his position on critical issues, but also for an open and accessible style that graces the 10th Congressional District he serves. Delahunt and his staff have proven to be responsive to the needs of constituents.

Delahunt's opponent, Republican Eric Bleicken, markets himself as a Reagan Republican and a former Navy Seal, not a bad political affiliation given the success of fellow Seal Jesse Ventura – who moved rapidly from the wrestling mat to the Minnesota governor's office.

Bleicken is an ingenuous and often articulate candidate, but he lacks experience and polish to qualify for such an important elected post. More significantly, his positions on the environment and energy policy would spell danger, if not disaster, for the area.

While Delahunt has worked his way to Congress from the Quincy City Council to the state House of Representatives to the Norfolk County district attorney's office, Bleicken is attempting to jump from Cape contractor to Capitol Hill – mainly because he is more engaged by national issues than local ones.

While experience is important, issues are more significant – and Delahunt's record is admirable, especially regarding the environment and health care. He has advocated and spoken out quite articulately about the problems with home health care and its lack of funding. He has worked hard to raise the issue to a national level and has helped local VNAs and home health advocates have a vice in this critical issue.

With Delahunt all but assured victory, a hope goes out with our endorsement: that the incumbent will continue to work vigorously for the economic and environmental health of the South Shore, even without the stimulus of strong, healthy competition.

Focusing on ballot questions

Massachusetts voters will face eight referendum questions on the Nov. 7 ballot. Five of these questions offer significant opportunities or present particular hazards for the Commonwealth. After meeting with proponents and opponents of these measures, the Community Newspaper Company editorial board offers these recommendations.

Question 4: Income Tax Rate Reduction

A prosperous economy has done wonders for state finances. The state's bond rating has been upgraded and its rainy day funds have been filled, expanded and filled again. Billions of dollars in surpluses have been put to good use: increased spending on education and health care, worthwhile capital improvements. Taxes have been cut 40 times, strengthening the state's businesses and putting money into the pockets of its residents.

Those cuts are good, but not quite enough. A U.S. Census study released last month found Massachusetts state taxes the fifth highest in the country. Like other factors that contribute to the high cost of doing business in this state, our income tax rate — the highest in the country — puts us at a competitive disadvantage that could hurt the economy down the road.

Question 4 will reduce the income tax rate, over three years, from 5.8 percent to 5 percent, costing the state $1 billion in revenues when fully implemented. Reputable analysts confirm that the state can afford the lost revenue without cutting spending. Opponents can cite a long list of worthy projects the state could spend that money on: smaller classes, better health care, paying down the debt or repairing crumbling schools. But defeating Question 4 won't do any of those things. It will just put more surplus cash into the hands of a Legislature that cannot be counted on to spend it wisely. We recommend a YES vote on Question 4.

Question 5: Health Care

Question 5 is a lesson in the dangers of referendum politics. The proposal, which claims to guarantee patient rights and pave the way for universal health care, was initiated to pressure the Legislature into acting on a Patients Bill of Rights bill. The Legislature responded, adopting comprehensive health care reform legislation this summer, but Question 5 remains on the ballot. Many of those who supported the referendum before the Legislature acted are now strongly opposed, but a few continue to push for its adoption.

Opponents of Question 5 say it would undo the positive work of the Legislature, that it would impose radical changes on the state's health care system, destroying the tools managed care uses to restrain costs. The Mass. Taxpayers Association estimates it would cost taxpayers, employers and consumers as much as $5.6 billion a year.

Not surprisingly, proponents of Question 5 paint a more benign picture. The biggest problem with Question 5 is that no one can predict exactly what it would do. The question greatly restricts insurers and health care providers, empowers two new government bureaucracies and mandates universal health care coverage without a plan for how to do it. This is not the way to restructure Massachusetts health care. We recommend NO on Question 5.

Question 6: Tolls and Excise taxes.

Its sponsor's billboards promise it would "End tolls and Auto Excise Taxes," but Question 6 would do no such thing. It would allow taxpayers to deduct the change they pay in tolls and the auto excise tax payments they make to local government from their state income taxes.

Far from "freeing the Pike," Question 6 would leave in place the long lines, the exhaust and the well-paid tolltakers. The cost of collecting tolls, which is where most Pike revenue is spent, would remain. Auto excise taxes would remain as well, but the state budget would take an immediate hit worth an estimated $700 million. Since the excise tax goes to cities and towns, the Legislature would be tempted to pass on its reduced income tax revenue in the form of cuts in local aid, which could have a devastating effect on municipal finances.

There's great inequity in a system that requires drivers who use the Mass. Pike and the bridges and tunnels north of Boston to pay tolls while those in other parts of the state use their highways for free. But this isn't the way to fix it. The state can afford the broad-based tax relief offered by Question 4; it cannot afford the narrowly-focused giveaway promised by Question 6. We recommend a NO vote.

Question 7: Charitable Giving

Massachusetts ranks dead last on the Catalog for Philanthropy's latest Generosity Index. The residents of no other state earn as much while donating as little to recognized charities. It's unproven that changes in the tax laws can soften a stingy heart, but it's worth a try.

Massachusetts is one of just eight states that do not allow a state income tax deduction for charitable giving. Question 7 would correct that, allowing contributions that qualify under federal tax rules to be deducted. The question's proponents estimate it would generate as much as $220 million a year in charitable gifts without significantly hurting state finances.

Faced with the popularity of the ballot question, the Legislature this summer enacted its provisions into law, making the vote on Question 7 little more than a formality. It's still important that the referendum be approved, if only to discourage attempts by State House interests from diluting or eliminating the deduction in years to come. We recommend a YES vote on Question 7.

Question 8: Drug Treatment and Forfeitures

Massachusetts prisons are swamped with prisoners whose crimes are inextricably linked to drug addiction. Using imprisonment to cure addiction is both expensive — incarceration costs about $25,000 a year, treatment just $4,000 —and ineffective.

Question 8 would take a modest step toward balancing law enforcement with drug treatment. It would allow judges to sentence those charged with non-violent drug offenses to court-supervised treatment instead of prison. It would reform the unfair asset forfeiture process and dedicate assets seized in drug prosecutions to a new fund to expand drug treatment.

Question 8 may not be able to deliver on all its promises. District attorneys, whose budgets now get a cut of assets seized under the current forfeiture system, may not vigorously pursue assets earmarked for drug treatment. The rules changes, while wise, may also reduce the amount of assets seized. And since no referendum initiative can appropriate funds, it will be up to the Legislature to allocate the drug treatment money.

But after decades of expecting law enforcement to solve the nation's drug problem, it's time to recognize that there are other ways to treat America's addictions. We must support prevention efforts and drug treatment as well as police and prisons. We recommend a YES vote on Question 8.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Revitalization

To the Editor:

In a recent letter, Andrew Quigley wonders if there is some pertinent history to explain the mistrust expressed by opponents of the non-profit Cohasset Revitalization Corporation. One may well ask what Messrs. Odelheide and Roy have done to invite such a torrent of obloquy, and whether such negative response to initiative is typical of our townspeople's behavior that has some historical explanation...

Well, Messrs. Odelheide and Roy haven't been here long enough to establish much history. Mr. Roy has upgraded the Kimballs-by-the-Sea motel and the Atlantica to much better establishments than formerly. He has purchased the boat repair facility and apparently intends to upgrade it while retaining its essential character, rather than destroying it to build condos as the former owner intended. Mr. Odelheide has replaced the decrepit Red Lion Inn with a first class establishment that is a credit to the town (and a better source of tax revenue). Both seem to have invested far more capital than is likely to be recovered in a very long time, if ever, so maybe the establishments are more the expensive hobbies of wealthy men than primarily income producers. Whatever, it is only natural that they wish the surroundings to be of a quality that signifies pride in the town's appearance. That self-interest isn't necessarily in conflict with the public interest. How can grown-ups imagine that they wish to convert the town to a cutsey Nantucket tourist haven? (It would be good, of course, if our village generated just enough business so we could have viable businesses instead of repeated failures and empty storefronts).

Sure, Mr. Roy has irritated some with his ostentatious yacht, and Mr. Odelheide is perceived as using pushy tactics in his Red Lion expansion.. But mostly what they have done wrong is be wealthy newcomers displaying youthful impatience with our neglect of public spaces, presumption in promoting a remedy, and insensitivity to our provincialism (and to our terror of potential exposure to tax increases)..

As for whether the history of townspeople's behavior could predict or explain the negativism (and some scurrilous statements), I guess Cohasset is, like the nation, capable of exhibiting not only great generosity but also occasional lapses into petty shortsightedness. There are plenty of examples of both.

One egregious example of the latter was the vituperation heaped on the late Clark Chatterton a few years ago when he advanced the town $200,000 to get over a time-sensitive roadblock related to the schools. (Being a teacher, the critics charged that he was serving his own self interest).

Kevin Ulmer has been accused repeatedly of promoting the Lobster Lab only so he could have an office with an ocean view and perhaps reap some commercial advantage from the students' work.

Some of the individuals now claiming to have supported the Lightkeepers project actually were roadblocks.

The former Cox estate, now occupied by the Roys and worth many millions of dollars, was offered to the town for less than one million dollars a few years ago but we were too cheap and shortsighted to accept.

A few years ago, the town refused to construct an adequate sewage treatment system, despite the availability of federal and state funds to cover much of the cost. Most of the technical and economic arguments were demonstrably false (but served the purpose). The real reason was elitist fear that the then-currently vacant lots would become buildable, thus degrading the quality of life of those already here. (New technology has rendered almost any lot useable, while Title 5 has made some existing unsewered lots very expensive to retain useability)

Some explain their opposition to CRC as based on desire to avoid change. But without action, the public spaces do change: they keep on deteriorating, so our successors will reap the results of current selfishness. We enjoy the benefits of the vision and energy which produced the many features and institutions in the town. We should continue the noblesse oblige. Surely we are better than suggested by the petition!

Red Lion support

Board of Selectmen:

I am writing to express my support of the efforts of Gerd Ordelheide in revitalizing the Red Lion Inn and restoring it to its former prominence as a landmark in the town center. While many have criticized his efforts and results, I feel that when completed the overall structure will be a great source of pride for everyone in the town. I believe he deserves your support.

Question 8

To the Editor:

As your police chief, I feel compelled to publicly speak out against Question 8 in the November ballot. The question is simply a backdoor approach to the legalization of drugs, something of which I am strongly opposed.

There is no question that drugs have been a serious plight on society and that the problems only appear to be growing. The acceptance and rationalization of marijuana and other drug use by today's teens and young adults is nothing short of staggering. Yes, drug addicts need treatment, however, money for treatment should not come at the expense of law enforcement. Only a combination of enforcement, treatment and demand reduction will stem the tide of drugs into this country and ultimately into this town.

Backdoor legalization approaches such as Question 8 will only allow drug dealers to continue to play their trade by claiming that they are drug dependent. Our experiences, however, have shown that in many investigations, this is not the case and that people most often sell drugs solely for the profit associated with its sale and in many cases do not use the drug themselves. Question 8 will effectively stymie the efforts of law enforcement to combat drugs. Treatment has its place in the drug strategy and funds are available from other sources to secure that treatment. Funding for law enforcement's end of the bargain is not available from other sources. Please vote no on Question 8 and allow law enforcement to continue to do its job. Question 8 is not really about treatment. It's about starting the process of legalization and that won't help anyone.

Refreshments

To the Editor:

The Family Service Committee wishes to express its appreciation for Atlantic Bagel's generous contribution to its "College Application Mania" which was held Oct 5, at the high school. The offer of refreshments after the guidance department's annual college fair and before the committee's program was a welcomed break and a smooth transition.

Right-of-way

To the Editor:

Article 3 of the warrant for the Nov. 13 special Town Meeting would have the town vote to designate the Old Colony Railroad Right-of-way "now and in perpetuity" as a public park.

That right-of-way was laid out more than 150 years ago through what was then open land, and for a century it served as a transportation corridor. In the 1950s when it was abandoned much thought was given as to its future use — a linear park for bicycles or horseback riding, sale to adjoining properties (practically all of the homes abutting the right-of-way were built when the railroad was operating) or keep it available for a possible transportation need in the future.

Such a right-of-way is unique; duplicating it would be enormously expensive, if not impossible. Certainly "designating (it) as a public park" might seem attractive at least for "now." However, at a time when South Shore population is growing rapidly and innovation is commonplace, to shackle an unknown future "in perpetuity," when such an action cannot be readily undone, would be presumptuous — and unwise.

Tax rollback

To the Editor:

I notice that opponents of Question 4 on the November Ballot say that they want to ensure our future by keeping our state income tax rate at 5.85 percent, instead of reducing it to 5 percent. The notion seems to be that higher taxes lead to more success in the future. The logic behind this would suggest that if we doubled the tax rate to 10 percent we could be even more successful.

The reality is that our success comes from the productivity of our people. Indeed it is necessary to raise taxes to accomplish certain common purposes, such a build roads and other infrastructure. However, when the state has a big surplus because of overtaxing its people, it is time to give the money back to the people who earned it, and not invent new needs that will consume the surplus. This will allow productivity in the state to increase, and thereby help ensure everyone's future.

Additionally, there is the small matter of keeping promises. 11 years ago, the tax was raised from 5 percent to 5.95 percent as a temporary measure to get the state out of fiscal crisis. We're out of crisis, so it's time to get back to "normal". Then, when the next crisis comes (by overspending or a turndown of the economy), we'll have room to increase taxes again on a temporary basis.

I encourage everyone to vote yes on Question 4, for the sake of our future.

Boy Scouts

To the Editor:

Having just moved to Cohasset six months ago, I found myself having to move again, approximately 1/3 of a mile from my former home.

This has been a difficult year for me. I've been in the hospital five times since Jan. 1, 2000. In June of 2000, I unfortunately was in the hospital for one month paralyzed. I have a continual disease for which I must use many medications, plus a walker and cane. I had called professional movers weeks before, and my doctor insists I not so much as lift a box.

At the very last moment Friday and Saturday, Oct. 6 and 7, the professional mover arrived and decided they were not going to do this job.

I was in a complete panic, not knowing what to do.

Lo and behold, Troop 28 Boy Scouts of America came to my rescue. They arrived at my home and moved as much as they could on a Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Phil Lehr, Mr. Wayne Schmidt and two of the Scouts Alex Schmidt and Will McArthur were my life savers. I can't tell you how much I appreciate all their kindness, thoughtfulness and difficult work they performed for me. I tried to pay them for their work, but they could not accept it.

Each of the Scouts have major projects in Cohasset they are performing for the town. A major suggestion to all — help these Scouts raise the funds they need for their projects. This only improves our town.

Although they were unable to accept funds from me, I made sure I donated to one of the Scouts, who is very short of funds, for his project.

Voting for First Lady

When Lucy Hayes was sworn in as First Lady in 1877, the first executive order that she issued was one that banned the consumption of alcoholic beverages in any form from functions of state in the White House.

HENSHAW

Tom Henshaw

The only exception to the ruling handed down by "Lemonade Lucy," as she was known, occurred at a reception for the Grand Duke Alexis Alexandrovitch of Russia, when she relented and the royal visitors were allowed a glass of wine.

You know how these Russians are when they can't get their vodka.

I bring this up at this time because next week we're going to vote for a new First Lady, and I'm not sure the electorate has been fully informed of what we're in for if they are elected.

For one thing, the name of Mary Elizabeth "Tipper" Gore (nee Atcheson) will appear on the ballot as Albert Gore, and the name of Laura Bush (nee Welch) will appear on the ballot as George W. Bush.

This is a way of fooling you into thinking that the male of the species is really running things, when all he is doing is attending international conferences (where drinks are served) and chasing chubby interns around the desk in the Oval Office.

Right from the start, even the First Ladies themselves have been in on the plot to deceive the electorate.

Right from the start, even the First Ladies themselves have been in on the plot to deceive the electorate.

"There are certain bounds set for me which I must not depart from — and as I cannot do as I like, I am obstinate and stay home a great deal," said Martha Washington, who was elected under the name "George."

Oh, yeah!

Martha, who was a widow at the time, was known as the wealthiest marriageable woman in Virginia when George popped the question, and thus brought more than just a talent for making chocolate chip cookies to their partnership.

The comment from Martha Washington on her new job as First Lady is taken from a new book, "First Ladies Quotation Book," by William O. Foss, who discovered it while plowing through a mountain of presidential memoirs, letters , and archives.

He also quotes Pat Nixon (aka Richard M.) as saying: "Being First Lady is the hardest unpaid job in the world," and Abigail Adams (aka John) as saying: "No man ever prospered in the world without the consent and cooperation of his wife."

"The one thing I do not want to be called is 'First Lady,'" said Jacqueline Lee Kennedy (nee Bouvier). "It sounds like a saddle horse."

Folks who checked off the name Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1932 would have been forgiven if they thought they were getting just another housewife after Anna Eleanor Roosevelt (nee Roosevelt) laid down the requirements for her new job.

"Always be on time. Do as little talking as humanly possible. Remember to lean back in the parade car so everybody can see the president," she said.

A better fit for Eleanor would be the cartoon that appeared in the New Yorker during World War II. It showed a miner working deep in a New Zealand coal mine looking up and exclaiming to his companion: "Holy cow, it's Mrs. Roosevelt!"

See, you never know what you're getting when you mark your ballot for First Lady.

Computer needed

The old computer that the library made available to the public for word processing is no longer functioning. If anyone has a relatively recent PC-Windows-95 or later with a CD-ROM to donate, the library would appreciate having it. Word processing is available at the Internet terminals, but they are frequently booked.

The Children's Room

Blue Cross Blue Shield recently announced a contest in conjunction with the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. "Jump Up and Go!" is the title of the contest and contestants, eligible ages 8-16, are asked to enter a list of 15 health reasons for being physically fit. Every entry with 15 reasons becomes eligible to win a trip for five to Busch Gardens in Florida. Entries must be postmarked by no later than Dec..1. Drawing will be held Dec.18.

AAUW hosts Geronimo sisters

The female co-founders of Secure Sponsorship, Laurie and Michele Geronimo, will be the featured speakers at the November Branch meeting of the Hingham Area Branch of AAUW at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 14, at Notre Dame Academy Main St. The program is free and open to the public.

In March, Secure Sponsorship won the prestigious 2000 Cambridge Incubator award for Internet-based non-profit startups. The award included $250,000 in seed capital, free office space in Cambridge, as well as donated expertise from consulting fellows and advisors from Harvard Business School, the MIT Sloan School of Management and McKinsey & Company.

The company's mission is serve other nonprofit organizations by putting the fund-raising process on-line for pledge drives, walks and other fund-raising efforts.

Twenty-something sisters and Wellesley College graduates, neither of them have MBA's; neither of them worked in the traditional high tech or 'new' economy prior to this ground-breaking venture. CEO Laurie Geronimo spent over eight years working in the medical field, including managing several cancer and HIV research labs. It was during those years that she hatched the idea for Secure Sponsorship after seeing a colleague's frustration in collecting and coordinating pledges for a bike-a-thon. CFO Michele Geronimo was a senior credit analyst at BankBoston where she researched and analyzed emerging companies in the media and communications industries. She also earned a certificate as a web designer before teaming up with Laurie in Secure Sponsorship. They can be reached at their web site www.securesponsorship.com.

They entered the Cambridge Incubator contest late last year. Competing against teams of almost all-male MBAs and high tech experts, they won round after round of the competition as they honed and refined their business plan presentation.

Boys roll on into tourney

Soccer team opens tourney at home Friday with Bishop Stang

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There aren't many teams going into the upcoming fall high school tourney with single digit wins. Of these, it's probably pretty safe to assume that few head in with as much confidence as the Cohasset boys soccer team.

The Skippers won their final seven games to finish the season at 9-6-1. They were thought to be a long shot for an upper half seed, and thus a home game to start the tourney. Apparently, however, they caught the eye of someone on the pairing committee. Cohasset opens the post-season on Friday at home against Bishop Stang at 3 p.m. (admission is $5 for adults, $3 for children).

"It would be nice to have a home game, but it really doesn't matter that much to us," said first year head coach Dave Nigro, before learning that the team had been awarded just that. "The most important thing for our team is that we keep playing the way we finished the season."

When the team was struggling early on this season with a new coach and a new system, Nigro preached patience and adherence. The results speak for themselves.

"We're a much more aggressive attacking team now than we were last year, and the guys are pretty comfortable with it now," observed Skippers captain Erik Shea. "It took a little time to get used to the change, but I think we've seen that we have the talent to pull it off and make it work for us."

Indeed, after seven straight wins to close the season, the last one over perennial powerhouse Hanover, Nigro's charges must be feeling somewhat invincible by now.

"I think we've got the talent to win in the tourney, and I like the boys' confidence. So much of this tourney is mental, though. Every game is do or die. We'll have to see how the kids respond to this."

Cohasset boys soccer coach
Dave Nigro

"We feel like we can play with just about anyone right now," said Shea, who plays sweeper and midfield for the Skippers. "I think we totally outplayed Hanover in that last game, and I think we could've easily beaten Norwell both times we played them this year."

Norwell finished the season at 15-0, and was expected to get the #1 seed in the Southeast Sectionals when the pairings were announced on Wednesday. Both of their wins over Cohasset this season were by the score of 2-1.

Norwell coach John Osgood admits himself that these two games

Girls close out tough season...

...but future looks bright

David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Though this season was disappointing for the girls varsity soccer team, their vast improvements over the course of the season have given Cohasset fans a taste of what's to come over the next few years.

"I am looking forward to the next three years," reported third year coach Deb Beal, who has 13 of her 17 varsity players returning next year.

The four seniors, captains Maureen Equi and Kathleen McCarthy, as well as Kerry McCarthy and Catherine Flaherty, were tremendous all season, keeping high spirits despite losing with regularity.

Equi bounced around positionally, playing forward and midfield, and "would have played defense if I had asked her to," noted Beal

"Maureen has been all around, everywhere," the coach continued.

The McCarthys, an extremely fast pair of twins, split duties at the outside midfield positions. Both standouts on the varsity track team, their speed slowed down offenses all year, and enabled them to get back and help out the defense.

MacQuarrie closes out career at Trinity

Former Cohasset High soccer player Brett MacQuarrie, son of Chris and Jane Kyricos, scored the game winning goal and added an assist to lead the Trinity College Bantams to a 2-0 win over the visiting Clark University Cougars in men's soccer on Oct. 24.

This game marked the final career home game for MacQuarrie, the tri-captain and senior forward, in Hartford, CT. A political Science major at Trinity, he has been a starting forward since his freshman year. Previously, he served as captain of the soccer team at Northfield Mount Hermon.

Girls to begin quest for state crown with Carver on Thursday

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Rarely does a small town high school team accomplish the laudable feats of this year's varsity field hockey squad.

With an outstanding record of 14-1-2, the Lady Skippers are heading to the state tournament with an excellent opportunity to advance for the first time in Cohasset's history.

"We have surprised a lot of people. But everything is going to get harder [in the playoffs.]"

Cohasset field hockey coach
Debbie Bostwick

"We have surprised a lot of people," said fourteenth year coach Debbie Bostwick. "But everything is going to get harder [in the playoffs.]"

Cohasset earned the number two seed in the Southeast Sectionals for Division 2, much higher than Bostwick's original projection of the five to eight range. To start the playoffs, the Lady Skippers will play the number15 seed Carver at home, this Thursday at 7:00 pm.

For her work in bringing this team to second place in the league, Bostwick received the honor of South Shore League Coach of the Year.

"She has been working with us not just as athletes, but as students and people," effused senior Ashley Ulmer, who has played for Bostwick for six years. "She is like our second mother during the field hockey season."

STAFF PHOTO/SUSAN HANEY

Cohasset's Andi Shaughnessy (white shirt) wound up finishing second in the South Shore League in scoring with 16 goals and seven assists.

"I just tell [the players] what to do, and they do it," the modest Bostwick replied to this adulation.

Last Friday, Cohasset defeated Scituate (2-13 on the year), 2-0. Senior Kelly Lordan scored two goals late in the second half, coming off assists from senior captain Andi Shaughnessy and sophomore Deanna Brown.

This game was originally looked at as a final tune-up before the playoffs, especially after a 3-0 shellacking of Scituate earlier this year. However, the plucky Lady Sailors played Cohasset as tough as any other team this year.

But Bostwick never gave up hope on her team, saying, "I knew these guys were good enough to pull it out."

The one dark mark of the game occurred in the waning moments when senior sweeper Karen McMorris went down with an injury. Fortunately, Beal believes with the league rival Skippers could've gone either way.

"(Cohasset) played us as tough as anyone all year," said Norwell High's longtime soccer coach. "I wouldn't be surprised if we saw them down the road in the tournament. I know if that happens we'd better be up for that game or we'll be in a lot of trouble."

Though, like most team's, the Skippers would be decimated by an injury to one of their top players, coach Nigro does feel he has developed some quality depth over the course of the season, allowing him to rotate fresh bodies into his up tempo style without relinquishing much in the way of talent.

Tim Baird, Greg O'Connell and Dan Kinchla share the two striker positions. Captain Doug O'Brien plays virtually the whole game, though, as a "roving" midfielder whose primary responsibility is to find openings at the offensive end.

Junior Matt Bilodeau is the backbone of the halfback core. He is the team's leading scorer, with eight goals and eight assists, and rarely comes off the field. The other midfield positions are shared by seniors Ted Gledhill and John Hertig, junior Eric Libby and freshman Chris Clark.

Junior Pete Maitland is also a mainstay at stopper. He is joined on the backline by Heath Heinz, Ben Bixby and Steve Lenny, all of whom split time pretty evenly at the two fullback positions.

Shea is the team's all important sweeper, though Nigro occasionally moves the gifted ballhandler up front when he feels the need to step up his offensive attack. On these occasions, sophomore Robert Hickey has proven a "very capable substitute" at sweeper, said Nigro.

Senior Nick Pestone has been a rock in net all season, recording eight shutouts, and keeping Cohasset in several tight games.

"I think we've got the talent to some games in the tourney, and I like the boys' confidence" summed up Nigro of his team's chances. "So much of this tourney is mental, though. Every game is do or die. We'll have to see how the kids respond to this."

she will be ready for Thursday's action.

As this was the last game of the regular season, the coaches took the time to recognize the 11 senior players who have been instrumental to their successful year. Also recognized was senior Elizabeth Ingber, who has performed the National Anthem before almost every home game for Cohasset's four varsity sports.

Bostwick also announced the five All-Stars for the squad during the pre-game ceremony.

For the third year in a row, senior captain Andi Shaughnessy was nominated to the All-Star team. With 16 goals and seven assists, she came in second in the league in scoring, and recorded one helper in the South Shore League's 3-1 victory over the Patriot League All-Stars.

Senior captain Sarah Kidder and senior Maggie O'Connor were both on the team for the second straight season. While Kidder chose to sit out the game in order to rest her ailing knee before the playoffs, O'Connor registered the South Shore's third goal of the game on a pass from Shaughnessy.

The first timers on the All-Star team were senior captain Kelly Devine and senior goalie Krysten Considine.

Including the win over Scituate, Considine recorded an unprecedented 12 shutouts in 17 games, allowing only seven goals the entire season. Though both statistics were tops in the league, Hanover's Lisa Bellantoni started the All-Star game, perhaps because the team was coached by Judy Schneider of Hanover (strangely reminiscent of Joe Torre starting Derek Jeter in this past year's All-Star game despite Nomar Garciaparra's superior stats) Bellantoni was in net when the Patriot League scored its only goal of the game.

"It is so much fun working with her," said Ulmer of Considine. "There is no fear; if the ball gets by you, you know she's there."

Devine played extremely well at the defensive back position, even though she had not played that position the entire season.

"Makes me wish I had put her there at the beginning of the season," joked Bostwick, who is still waiting for her opportunity to win the division, and get the opportunity to coach the All-Star Game.

Though Bostwick will always be left wondering how Devine would have fared as a defender, her defensive unit, consisting of seniors Ulmer, Kidder, McMorris, and Morgan Hurley, has been one of the best in the league.

But their ability to work so well side by side has been no strange stroke of luck.

"We are best friends off the field, so working together has been great," said Ulmer with a big grin.

Cohasset's main competition in the playoffs will be Hanover, the #1 seed. Cohasset lost the first game between them, and tied recently in an exciting home game.

"We are just as good as Hanover," said Lordan. "And Hanover made it to the finals."

In order to prepare for the post-season, Bostwick has not changed much of her normal practicing routine. The one thing they will focus on are their corners, where, in Bostwick's opinion, this team has failed to capitalize on too many scoring opportunities.

Junior varsity coach Ashley Timmers, a former right wing for the Scituate High School team, will assist in the offensive parts of practices.

One thing that has made this team so impressive is that, throughout the season, none of the players has become complacent about their success. The Lady Skippers were awarded third place for the Clark Chatterton Sportsmanship Award, named after the legendary Cohasset Athletic Director, to whom this season was dedicated.

Chatterton firmly believed that this group of girls would be the ones to put a banner in his gym.

"Every other word out of his mouth would be 'hey, how about that fieldhockey team,'" said Bostwick. "I know he is up there with a scarf around his neck and a pea coat watching us."

"I know he would be really proud," added Lordan. "He would always say that this field hockey team would go all the way."

In order to fulfill Chatterton's "banner" wishes, the Lady Skippers will need to advance to the semifinals. The closest Cohasset has ever come to advancing past the first round was in 1990 and 1992, when Cohasset lost to Nantucket in games that should have been forfeits by the opposition because of an illegal player.

Last year, when Cohasset had its highest seed ever at the number 15 spot, they were eliminated by Milton, 3-0, in the first round. Milton did go on to make it to the semifinals, but have not qualified for the playoffs this season.

Despite the plethora of experience on the team, the post-season is always a nerve racking experience.

"Hopefully I can control their nerves," said Bostwick. "Physically I think we are okay, but mentally is what I need to work on."

Regardless of how the team performs in the tournament, this season will go down in the minds of Skipper fans as the best in Cohasset's field hockey history.

SPORTS NOTES

Youth Center winter registration

The Scituate Youth Center will be holding registration for its winter programs on Saturday, Nov. 4 from 9 a.m.-12 noon at the offices of Harbour Insurance Co. located at 301A on the Driftway.

Programs being offered include boys floor hockey for grades 2-5, basketball for girls and boys grades 4-8 and instructional basketball for girls in grades 2-3.

Registration fee for each program is $20. Due to gym space available enrollments will be limited.

Any questions call (781) 545-0435.

Recreation basketball registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department/Booster's basketball registrations will be held for girls and boys in grades 1 through 8, at the Town Hall, Saturday, Nov. 11, from 9 to 11 a.m. The fee for the program is $45. Checks should be made payable to Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club, (CBBC), shirt charge is included in the fee. Details on the basketball program will be available at registration. Games are played Saturdays, but not during any vacation periods in order to avoid conflicts. The recreational basketball program is made available via the joint efforts of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club and the Recreation Department, providing youngsters with a teaching and recreational opportunity. Evaluations will be Saturday, Dec. 2. The CBBC will also register parents who wish to coach and sponsor at the Nov. 11 registration. This year two levels of sponsorship are available, team sponsors, $75, and team and program book sponsors $100.

Cohasset's Maura McKenney fights for possession with Hull player in Lady Skippers recent win.

Tough season...

Flaherty, a forward, was one of only five Skippers to score this season. She has shown great improvements to Beal over the past three years.

"She has turned into a good player," appraised the coach. "She really wants to win."

Unfortunately, winning did not come as frequently as anyone in blue would have liked, as they finished the regular season with a record of 2-14-2. However, as many of the players were quick to point out, many of the games which could have easily been ties or even wins were lost in the final 10 minutes.

"It was always very close," said sophomore sweeper Yasmine Afshar, who got her first taste of varisity action this season. "There were probably eight games we should have won."

Beal also noted the tightness of the season. Despite the lopsided record, she noted: "Games we lost by two or three last year, we are only losing by one."

Cohasset ended the season on a bad note, losing 10-0 to the Lady Indians of Hanover, who will be moving to the Patriot League next year.

"Mentally we were done," said Beal of the loss, which came after an exciting 2-1 victory over Chatham. "For every good player we have, Hanover has four."

Hanover finished the season as the number one team in the league, and, unfortunately, scheduled Cohasset for its first and final game (the first game was a 7-0 loss.)

During both games, as in many others this past season, first year goalie Kelly Holway faced relentless shots from all angles. But the sophomore persevered through a shoulder dislocation early in the season and continued to play well for a team that simply could not find a goalie at the beginning of the year.

"Kelly has had a great season," reported Beal. "She is always there, always 100%."

Kelly was helped by the defensive unit of Afshar, sophomores Julie Lordan and Maura McKenney, and juniors Carlie Carter and captain Maggie O'Neil. Their outstanding play took a lot of pressure of Holway's shoulders all season.

"I have to give credit to my defensive people," said Beal.

O'Neil, the only Skipper to be named to this year's All-Star team, which played at Alumni Field November first, scored eight out of the team's sixteen goals on the year. Her hat trick in the Skippers 6-0 win over Hull was definitely one of the season highlights.

The forwards on the team— juniors Becky Ross (second on the team with three goals) and Kate Grimm, sophomores Katherine Coyne, Julie Shea and Molly Flanagan (one goal, one assist), and freshman Gillian Weber— will all be returning next year.

The midfield was manned by four seniors, but Beal is hopeful that sophomores Katie Portanova and Nell Brewer will go a long way towards filling that void next year.

Also, there are 26 junior varsity players waiting in the wings for their opportunity to rise to the next level. This squad finished their season with a strong record of 5-4-5, and many hope to continue their success on through their varsity years.

Antoine in Cohasset public schools, some in every grade. From four to six METCO students graduate every year.

Program supporters say both Cohasset and METCO students benefit from the program. METCO students leave Cohasset with a hard-earned diploma and Cohasset students get an education in diversity.

"When children leave school [in Cohasset] and go to work, they could sit next to someone who looks different than they do, speaks a different language, is of a different religion or different ethnic background," said Allison Moskow, who, along with Olivia Baldwin, is a co-coordinator of the PSO METCO committee. "It behooves us as parents to allow our children to be comfortable with difference."

The school's METCO coordinator agrees that both Cohasset and Boston students benefit from the program.

"A district like Cohasset lacks diversity, and I think what we do is provide an element of diversity in the students who live in this community. They learn from each other," she said. Jones, a Boston resident, has two children enrolled as METCO students in other towns. "It's a different culture so when they leave Cohasset and go out into the big vast world, they would've been exposed to people different from themselves."

As a PSO coordinator, it's Moskow's responsibility to find host families, and be an advocate for METCO students. A host family serves as a "geographical liaison" for students. Moskow, who hosts a METCO student, said that can mean bringing a student home on half days until the bus arrives for the trip back to Boston, providing transportation for METCO students who wish to stay late and play or participate in extracurricular activities; or providing a bed for a student to sleep in.

Antoine said he's used his host family to spend the night in town, or just for someone to talk to.

School committee member Stephanie Noble admires the students for making the effort to be part of the Cohasset school system. "Can you imagine leaving your family every day at 5:30 in the morning, arriving in a strange town, going to school, and then going back home?" she asked. "It's a difficult set of circumstances.

"I wish we didn't need a METCO program, I wish we all had good community schools," she added. "But the fact is there isn't, and parents have chosen to send their children to a community like Cohasset because they want a better education."

According to Jones, "at least 90 percent (of METCO students) goes on to higher education," way above the national average, not just of minorities, but all high school graduates.

METCO students are cut no slack, despite less than ideal school life. Jones said Boston students are held to the same standards as Cohasset students. "They can stay after school or go to METCO Incorporated in Boston, which provides tutorial for those who can't stay here," she said.

But Antoine said just attending Cohasset public schools won't guarantee him anything. "If you have the attitude 'I don't want to be here,' you won't get a lot out of the experience," he said. As a member of the wrestling team and yearbook committee, Antoine knows about the adversity that comes with being a "commuter student." He said it can be hard getting back and forth, but credited the hospitality of Cohasset families for always offering him a place to stay if needed.

The school committee and PSO hope to expand residents' interest in becoming host families. Not only do host families establish relationships with the students, but the students' families themselves. On Nov. 5, the annual METCO dinner will be held at Cohasset High School. Moskow said it's an opportunity for the Boston and Cohasset families to get together and socialize. All Cohasset residents are welcome. A similar event is held in Boston later in the year.

The town subsidizes the METCO program. According to Superintendent Edward Malvey, the state gives towns $2,280 per pupil. Cohasset has an integrated per-pupil cost of $7,252. The difference, said Malvey, is picked up by the town. But, he added, the school committee sees it as a cost worth taking on.

Before-school programs merged

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset School Committee recently voted to allow the town's before-school program for METCO students join the before-school breakfast program for Cohasset students, known as the "Breakfast Club."

Traditionally, METCO elementary students arrive at the Osgood School up to 50 minutes early, and kill time by eating a breakfast, which they brought with them, and doing homework. But on the other side of the building, Cohasset students participate in a similar program, where parents, who have to leave for work before their child's bus arrives, pay a fee and bring their child to school early.

"They've done the right thing," PSO METCO co-coordinator Allison Moskow said of the school committee's decision.

METCO (Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity) is a volunteer state program where suburban towns will accept Boston students into their school systems. In Cohasset, which has participated in the program for about 30 years, 50 students are spread out in grades K-12. All 50 students come down from Boston together, and one bus in the afternoon takes all the students home. Because students at the middle/high school are due at school earlier than elementary school students, Osgood School students arrive at school before everyone else.

PSO METCO co-coordinator Olivia Baldwin argued before the school committee the students should be allowed to join their in-town counterparts, rather than left "in a holding pattern after spending an hour on a bus."

By joining the two before-school programs, Moskow said it will give the young students a chance to interact, which they normally don't get to do outside of a classroom setting. "That is one of the most unquantifiable benefits of METCO," she said.

"I look at it as a time for those students, who really don't know each other, to get to know each other," said Yvonne Jones, the METCO coordinator for Cohasset Public Schools. "They don't always get the opportunity to socialize with each other, and this provides the opportunity for that to happen."

The before-school breakfast program allows children to munch on a breakfast they bring with them, get some extra homework help, or play before the school day starts. Though Cohasset parents have to pay for their child to participate in this program, METCO parents won't have to.

Moskow said the METCO students already have a supervisor, and no additional staff would be needed to integrate the groups. Any additional costs incurred would come from $50,000 in additional METCO funding the town received from the state.

"It's a win-win situation," Superintendent Edward Malvey told the school committee.

"We're taking money from the METCO grant, which is allocated for METCO needs...to cover any costs incurred," Moskow explained. "The bottom line is we're allowing students, who have so little social time together, to spend time getting to know each other as peers."

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello Everyone! I just wanted to take this time to introduce myself and this column. My name is Jennifer Piepenbrink and my husband Bob and I have three children in the Cohasset School System. Daniel is in the fifth grade, Callie is in first and Cody is in kindergarten. I feel very fortunate to be able to have my children in such a great system. At times, just like any program there are issues on any number of subject but, I feel that on the whole, we have a great program here in our town. Because it is so easy to hear only the negatives, I felt that it would be very beneficial for us as parents, educators and any other interested citizen to be able to have a spot for all of the positive things to be shared. The Cohasset Mariner has allowed this to happen here in our column, "School's In!" Please read it, tell everyone about it and send in all items you may have to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, mail it to me at 622 CJC Highway or call me at 923-1057. All photos are welcome as well.

Let's start this weeks column with a great big thank you to all who helped on "Make A Difference Day" at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools. Despite the rapidly dropping temperatures, "Make A Difference Day" was a huge success! Over at the Osgood School, the playground games were repainted and the picnic tables were given a fresh coat of paint as well. Some mulch was raked, some bulbs were planted in front of the school and everything looks great. Look for the plants next spring! Over at the Deer Hill School, two new picnic tables were assembled and put up, wear mats were installed under the swing area and the bike racks in front of the school were repainted. Some weeding and landscaping was also done in the courtyard and in the front of the school. Thank you to everyone who came out to "Make A Difference!"

Who out there loves pizza? Well, most everyone I know does. The Deer Hill students are very busy selling Little Caesar Pizza kits. These kits can be frozen or cooked right away and their are many different types available. For every kit that is sold, $5 goes to the Deer Hill PSO fund for the purchases of "Alpha Smart" portable computer companions. These wonderful tools allows its users to enter and edit text and then send it to any (PC or Mac) computer for formatting or directly to a printer! So please, if any of you are hungry or want to help a great program, find a Deer Hill student or give one of the following people a call. Adrienne MacCarthy (383-1028), Susan Galligan (383-0765) or Lynn Conway (383-6695.) This sounds like a yummy, delicious way to get out of cooking a few dinners and helping a great cause. Thank you to everyone who makes a purchase.

The Annual Fall METCO Dinner is being held on Sunday, Nov. 5 from 3-6 p.m. at the high school cafeteria. The PSO METCO committee welcomes new and returning Boston students and the families to Cohasset. Currently, we are looking for several new host families for students in Grades 1-10. Please call Olivia Baldwin at 383-1866 or Allison Moskow at 383-9242 to discuss any interest in this wonderful program that you may have. Thank you to all families, staff and faculty for your participation and support.

There will be an informational meeting being held on Wednesday, Nov. 15 at 7 p.m. in the Deer Hill cafe, to discuss the trip to Camp Bournedale for next year. This meeting is for the parents of the current fifth-grade students. Also being discussed at this meeting will be possible fundraisers that could be held for this wonderful experience. Please bring all ideas and thoughts to the meeting. Hope to see you there!

I hope that everyone had a safe, fun and enjoyable Halloween. The sights were wonderful all around town and the children all looked great! Have a great week!
Jennifer Piepenbrink

Local teachers recognized

A select group of America's teachers are being honored by their toughest critics — their former students — in the sixth edition of "Who's Who Among America's Teachers, 2000."

All of the approximately 114,000 teachers being honored were selected by their former students who themselves are currently listed in "Who's Who Among American High School Students," or "The National Dean's List," publications which recognize 5 percent of the nation's high school and college students respectively.

The students were requested to nominate the one teacher from their entire academic career who "made a difference in their lives" by helping to shape their values, inspiring interest in a particular subject and/or challenging them to strive for excellence.

Local educators honored in "Who's Who Among America's Teachers, 2000" include the following.

Cohasset: Scott Newkirk and Dennis Walsh, both of Cohasset Middle-High School.

Hingham: Christine Berman, Scituate HS; Gerard Bliss, Hingham Sr. HS; Mary Brennan, St. Paul School; Trina Crowley, South Elementary; Jean Eckblad, Dedham HS; Annmarie Fennelly, Hingham Sr. HS; Lyne Flaherty, Hingham Sr. HS; Nancy Hanson, Archbishop Williams HS; Linda Hubeny, Plymouth River Elementary School; Claudia Leone, Hingham Sr. HS; Gale Nutter, Hingham Sr. HS; Karen Pappalardo, Academy Avenue Primary School; Elizabeth Ruggiero, Hingham Sr. HS; Edward Schreider, Hingham Sr. HS; Gail Ward, Notre Dame Academy.

Providing a helping hand for Cohasset's senior citizens

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@ENC.COM

It's the goal of a lot of elders to spend their Golden Years in the house they raised their family in, or maybe even was born in. But as anyone with elderly parents or grandparents knows, getting them to admit they can no longer live by themselves safely, or at the least without some sort of assistance, can be very difficult.

Luckily, in most towns, resources have been set up to do just that, help elders stay in their homes. In Cohasset, it's the Council of Elder Affairs, part of the broader South Shore Council on Elder Affairs. And the eyes and ears of the office is Carol Barrett.

Barrett is the outreach worker that talks to Cohasset seniors or physically checks on them, to make sure they are living comfortably.

"I will talk to people on the phone or go to their homes and talk to family members. I'm focusing on keeping people safe and in their homes."
— Carol Barrett

"My main purpose is to provide information, counseling and assistance to the citizens of Cohasset and inform them of the benefits and services available in the community," she explained.

"I will talk to people on the phone or go to their homes and talk to family members. I'm focusing on keeping people safe and in their homes."

Barrett's and the Council's goals aren't just making sure people are physically all right, but providing opportunities to allow seniors to remain at home.

As an outreach worker Barrett evaluated what a senior's needs are, and works with them to coordinate the appropriate services.

She said family members can contact her if they have a concern about a loved one in town. She helps seniors fill out their fuel assistance program applications, or Medicaid applications, or arrange transportation to medical appointments, or to the grocery store.

"If someone wants me to go with them to see a doctor because they might be getting bad news, I'll go, or help people fill out HMO forms," she said. "We have a medical van that goes within a 15-mile radius of the senior center." Barrett said the council, in coordination with the towns of Hingham, Norwell, Scituate and Hull, has a medical transport vehicle that makes trips into Boston twice a week.

"I have telephone reassurance calls. I'll ask an elder if they want me to call them," she said. "I work with a volunteer group that wants to work elders as a friendly visitors, or do some calling."

Barrett, a former director of nursing at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, said some seniors aren't as fortunate as others. "The people that I deal with are seeking help," she explained. "There are some elders in our community that have a lot of help. They have a family or extended family that are marvelous caregivers and really don't need an outreach worker. But when the family can't do that because they're working or carrying on with other things, that's where we step in."

She said one of the outreach program goals is to keep Cohasset's seniors, who account for more than 20 percent of the town's population, informed. "Last year with the Y2K issue coming up, we ran a number of articles [in the Elder Affairs newsletter] in regards to problems with electrical power going down...At the beginning of hurricane season we'll run an article," she said. "When I go to a person's house, I bring over a certain amount of information. I'll talk about our programs that we have in place, the medical van and transportation van available for places like food shopping, or the mall, or the hairdresser. I'll encourage them to come to our nutrition site for lunch."

Barrett said she will talk to between 40 and 60 people in her 24-hour week. Some information will be fun, such as the upcoming intergenerational dinner on Nov. 15. But she also talks to seniors about more serious issue such as a health care proxy, wills, or fuel assistance programs.

Her mother struggled to live at home in her later years, so Barrett feels she understands the difficulties seniors face. "Fuel costs and medical premiums are going up...Just the premiums alone when on fixed incomes is frightening to them," she said. "Some will tell me 'I don't buy anything extra.' They pay for food, they pay for their houses and that's all they have money for. There is a lot of concern in the community."

Joe Buckley, treasurer of the town's Elder Affairs Committee, said the outreach program is needed to find who needs help in the community. "There is all different kinds of people in this town, some who have very serious needs," he said. "People my age grew up in depression and even after making 60 bucks a week. You can't save too much on that. There weren't any IRA's. People now in their 70s and 80s didn't have the backup that young people of today have. Some are doing fine, but there are others that are hurting through no fault of their own. They just never had chance to put money away.

"[Barrett] does home visits and finds out what peoples needs are...She does a service that is really needed in the community."

As a nurse for more than 40 years, the 63-year old Barrett admits to having developed a bit of a soft spot for seniors. "That's the population I've worked with all of my life," she said. "Elders are so gracious and thankful for any small thing you do for them." After retiring, Barrett took course at UMass-Boston in geriatrics. She also began volunteering with the Council of Elder Affairs. When the position of outreach worker opened up, Barrett applied for the town-funded position and has now been there for two years.

And though she hasn't reached the point where she needs an outreach worker of her own yet, she doesn't doubt there may be a day down the road when it is needed. "We have wonderful service from the Council of Aging does for our community," said the 30-year town resident. "That's another reason why one lives in a town like Cohasset."

As the outreach worker for the Council on Elder Affairs, Carol Barrett is a familiar figure to many of the town's seniors.

Cohasset Maritime Institute looking for boat storage space

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@ICNC.COM

The recent go-ahead for development of the Hagerty property is viewed as great for the town of Cohasset, but it may prove to be a headache for the Cohasset Maritime Institute (CMI).

CMI, which is a non-profit maritime education organization run by teacher Jack Buckley, currently leases the town-owned boathouse on the Hagerty property, off Parker Avenue.

One of the programs offered by CMI is a rowing program for teenagers, that gives them basic rowing instruction. Naturally, one of the things needed for a successful rowing program is boats.

According to Buckley, the program now has six or seven boats, ranging from 29-foot plus sliding row boats, 26-foot surf rescue boats, to smaller 15-foot "gulls." Because of space constraints, he is unable to store all of the boats inside the boathouse, and has been storing some in the unused portions of the Hagerty property.

The problem, Buckley told the Hagerty Property Committee at its meeting last week, is with construction of the new parking lot on the water-front site, he will lose the storage space for his boats.

"We've never really had a place to store all the boats," said Buckley. He said CMI has had to rely on the kindness of its neighbors in the past, storing boats on the Cohasset Sailing Club's grounds, at the Cohasset Yacht Club, and the Cohasset Harbor Marina.

At last month's Town Meeting, $175,000 was appropriated to turn the former site of the Cohasset Colonials furniture manufacturing company into a 28-space parking lot, construct a public pier and dock, and build a wooden walkway from the property, across the marsh to Government Island. Three parking spaces are proposed for the area in front of the boathouse where some of the boats are currently kept.

Bids for the project are expected to go out within the next month. Committee chairman Russ Bonetti hopes work can begin this fall and be finished by the spring.

Normally, during non-boating season months, Buckley doesn't have to worry about space constraints. But for the four to six months work is going on, Buckley and CMI won't be able to use the property as storage space, for fear of damage to the boats' fiberglass shells from flying rocks and concrete and other construction debris.

The committee had plenty of suggestions as to solving Buckley's plight, but as of press time, no final decision had been made. Committee member Ham Tewksbury suggested to Buckley that he ask for permission to use some vacant land next to sailing club as temporary storage.

And once construction is finished, Buckley still expects to experience a squeeze on available space. He normally stored the boats around the property's unused yard, such as the concrete slab, or space in front of the boathouse itself. But with the above spots to be converted into parking, Buckley's options are limited.

The boathouse, at right, was once surrounded by factory buildings.

Committee member Paul Pattison suggested Buckley use his status as a non-profit organization to get a permanent hold on the space next to the sailing club. Buckley welcomed the suggestion, despite being initially wary that some residents would see his request as a precedent to ask the town for space to store their boats. "There is a difference between a private owner asking for space, and a non-profit that serves the public," he reasoned. "It's not opening a can of worms."

Joe Migliaccio, also of the Hagerty committee, suggested that if the Government Island space fell through, Buckley should invest in some racks to hang the boats on during the boating season on the future lawn. Part of the Hagerty renovation plan calls for the old driveway to the property, be "re-sodded" with grass. Questions arose, however, about whether the boats would then interfere with handicapped access to the Lobster Lab, which occupies the house on the property.

"If he can work out a rack system, I won't have any problem with that," said Bonetti.

Food, clothing drive planned

The CHS student group, the Social Awareness Organization, has been participating in many recent activities in the community. In early October, members took part in the Making Strides Against Breast Cancer walk in Boston, as well as a walk benefiting the SIDS foundation in Hingham. They are planning more events in the upcoming weeks, including food and clothing drives planned for November and December.

There will be drop-off bins for both drives located at the main entrances of the Cohasset High School. The students would appreciate any help or support the community could offer.

Exact dates will be announced in coming weeks. The SAO will be continually updating their activities throughout the year to keep the community informed.

Garage news

The Garage will be open Friday and Saturday, Nov. 3 and 4, from 5-10 p.m. for grades 6 and over.

There will be a dance for grades 6-8 from 7:30-10 p.m., Friday Nov. 10, at the Garage, $5 per person admission.

Garden Club honors past presidents

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset recently honored past presidents at its monthly meeting.

Polly Logan who founded the club in 1959 and was its first president spoke highly of the club and its leaders

"Our presidents have been service-oriented and involved our membership in good causes said Logan. People who share a common direction and a sense of community can get where they are going quicker and more easily because they are traveling on the strength of one another. We all were willing to accept help when we needed it and to give help when needed."

Logan also recalled the farmers market that the club had in a friend's barn and the wreath workshop in their basement." All were cheerful and pleasant upbeat and optimistic," Logan said. "We all shared the task of leadership and as leaders we always saw an oak tree in an acorn. We always believed that the membership could do anything."

Today the Community Garden club has grown to 200 members and continues its involvement in the community. The club has worked for seven years to design, establish and maintain the gardens at the lightkeepers' cottage, an outgoing community-development project, which has earned the club the Robert H. Rucker Award from the National Council of State Garden Clubs for landscaping design and a state award from the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts for civic development and beautification The club continues its support of garden therapy at the Cohasset Knoll, Junior Gardeners' program, awarding scholarships annually to graduating high school seniors, Arbor Day program at local schools, financial support to several organizations and many other projects which are part of the club's effort to serve the community.

Polly Logan who founded the Community Garden Club talks to its members.

The major fund-raising project is the Christmas house tour that takes place every other year and attracts between 800 to 1,000 people. This year the club will exhibit at the New England Flower Show. Several field trips are now being planned as well as holiday and horticultural workshops.

"Our garden club work becomes a way to use those interests and talent of our members," said President Ann Pompeo. "It is a way to become involved with our community, of planning and helping to carry out civic projects and make new friends."

"We all look forward to supporting her programs and projects," said Logan. "As we all are indebted to her for assuming the presidency and giving so generously of her time and talent."

IT'S HAPPENING

ASP car wash

On Saturday, Nov. 4, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Appalachia service volunteers will sponsor a car wash at the Second Congregational Church on the Cohasset Common.

The cost is a donation to benefit the home repair project in Appalachia this summer. High school students and adult advisors work together throughout the year to cover all their expenses, which include room and board, construction materials and transportation..

Garage dance

Cohasset Youth Resources will hold a grade 6-8 dance Friday evening, Nov. 10, from 7:30 to 10:30 p.m., at the Teen Garage. Pat Carbone will DJ this dance and admission is $5 per person.

Deep ecology study circle meets tonight

An introductory presentation for those who might be interested in forming or joining a group will be held Nov. 2, 7:30 p.m., at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave. To RSVP or for more information, contact Jim Shipsky, 781-383-9024, shipsky@cs.com.

A Sustainable Step New England representative will be present to answer questions and conduct a short discussion as a sample of what a study circle is like.

A workbook with readings will be available for those who wish to join the group. The workbook cost is $15; there are no other costs involved. The group will continue to meet once a week for nine weeks.

Encaustic painting

Artist Tracy Spadafora will teach a two-day encaustic painting workshop at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Nov. 4 and 5. Through demonstration and hands-on participation, this two-day workshop will cover all aspects of the encaustic method. Spadafora brings to her classes an extensive background in teaching and painting. She has taught at a number of art schools including the School of the Worcester Art Museum, the Arlington Center for the Arts, the DeCordova Museum School, the New Art Center in Newton, and the Munroe Center for the Arts in Lexington, Mass.

Art center noted for philanthropy

Cohasset-based South Shore Art Center has been selected to be included in the Massachusetts 2000 Catalogue for Philanthropy. The catalogue, conceived and supported by the Ellis L. Phillips Foundation with help from other foundations and corporations, profiles 50 of Massachusetts' outstanding cultural, environmental and human service agencies. The South Shore Art Center, as a member of the Consortium of Community Art Centers, was chosen from an applicant pool of more than 200 organizations.

The catalogue was first published in 1997, to increase charitable giving and public understanding of philanthropy. The catalogue has directly raised more than $800,000 for individual charities, encouraging the creation of three new community foundations and contributed to a significant increase in the creation of private grantmaking foundations. It has played a leading role in numerous other efforts to promote philanthropy here in Massachusetts.

One of the catalogue's most influential contributions has been the nationwide "Generosity Index." IRS summaries of the nation's income-tax returns show that New England as a whole, and Massachusetts in particular, rank lower in giving and higher in income than any other region and state in the country. For last year, Massachusetts ranked 50th, as it has in five of the last eight years.

According to George McCully, Phillips Foundation trustee and coordinator of The Catalogue Project, "The catalogue is designed to be a showcase for Massachusetts philanthropy and a one-stop-shop for a family's charitable giving. A single check, electronic transaction over the web (www.catphilanthropy.org) or stock transfer can be allocated to as many charities as the donor pleases, and because the catalogue is sponsored and paid for by Massachusetts grantmakers, 100 percent of every donation goes to the designated charities."

The South Shore Art Center was chosen after competitive review by senior professional grantmakers. "Charities are selected for general excellence, cost-effectiveness, and teaching value about philanthropy, McCully said.

Singers sought

Save the date of Dec. 16, for a special family holiday performance of "Amahl and the Night Visitors," presented by South Shore Conservatory, at First Parish Church, Tremont Street, Duxbury. There will be two performances, at 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. to accommodate busy schedules and all ages. Tickets , at $10 per person and $5 for seniors and students, go on sale Nov. 15, at The Ellison Center for the Arts in Duxbury, the Conservatory in Hingham, Westwinds Bookshop in Duxbury, or call (781) 934-2731, Ext. 14.

OBITUARIES

James P. McGee

James Patrick McGee, 61, of Cohasset, a 37-year employee of the former New England Telephone Co., died of lung cancer Monday at Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston.

Mr. McGee was born in Somerville. He graduated from Boston College High School and Franklin Institute. He lived in Cohasset for many years.

He leaves his wife, Dennis (Johnson) McGee; a son, Philip Thomas McGee of Marshfield and Peter James McGee of Pembroke; a daughter, Louise Ann McGee of Kingston; his mother, Rose McGee of Melrose; a sister, Mary (McGee) Kelly of Westwood and two grandchildren.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Thursday at St. Anthony Catholic Church. Interment will be in Woodvale Cemetery.

Arrangements are by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, contributions in Mr. McGee's memory may be made to Kenneth B. Schwartz Center, 101 Charles River Plaza, Suite 660, Boston, 02114-2792.

Thomas B. Williams

Thomas Blake Williams, 89, of Cohasset, a vice president of Rivett Lathe and Grinder Inc. in Brighton, died Oct. 29 at home after a long illness.

Mr. Blake worked at Rivett Lathe and Grinder Inc. for 30 years, starting as a salesman and retiring as vice president in charge of the marketing division.

After retirement, he worked at Milton Academy from 1966 to 1972 as director of development and served as a Bradford College trustee. He was appointed acting president of the college in 1973.

Mr. Williams also served on the board of the North Bennet Street School, Boston, for 15 years. His interest in this environment and protecting open space led to a 30-year association with The Trustees of Reservations.

While living in Dover, he served on numerous town committees and was a selectman for several years.

He enjoyed boats and sailing.

He served in World War II as captain in a crash boat in the Army Air Service Rescue.

He graduated from Milton Academy in 1930 and Harvard University in 1934. He attended Harvard Business School for a year, and lived in Dover and Boston before moving to Cohasset.

He leaves his wife, Eleanor (Claflin) Williams; a son, Thomas B. Williams Jr. of Warren, Vt.; three daughters, Susan W. Dickie of Weston, Eleanor W. Wright of Rockport, Maine, and Sandra W. Weiss of Arrowsic, Maine; 11 grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Friday at Second Congregational Church of Cohasset, 43 Highland Ave. The Rev. Gary Ritts will officiate. Interment will be private.

There will be no visiting hours.

Arrangements are by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Memorial gifts may be made to The Trustees of Reservations, Long Hill, 572 Essex St., Beverly 01915-4530.

Monday evenings with Rabbi Karol

At Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, Rabbi Stephen Karol will teach a course entitled "Making Saturday Holy: The Shabbat Morning Service. The classes begin at 8 p.m. and will meet on Nov. 6, Nov. 20, and Nov. 27.

No matter how many services you have attended or how much Hebrew you know, you can always learn more. This course will focus on not only what prayers are in Shabbat morning service, but also why they are there.

Other voices

The Rev. Zina Jacque is the second speaker for The Glastonbury Series "Listening to Other Voices: the Way of Prayer in Our Religious Traditions."

The topic is P.U.S.H. — Pray Until Something Happens, Thursday, Nov. 9, at 7:15 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey, Hingham.

The talk is sponsored by The Benedictine community of Glastonbury Abbey, Hingham.

The Rev. Zina Jacque is associate pastor and interim director of Christian Education for the First Baptist Church Melrose, in Melrose. In addition to serving in the financial aid offices of four leading colleges and universities, Jacque was also executive director of Tenpoint, a coalition of Boston area churches interested in reaching out to Boston's at-risk youth. Jacque brings broad pastoral experience in her American Baptist tradition where she has developed and implemented inter-faith and cultural diversity programs.

In addition to the African-American tradition of prayer, The Glastonbury Series has already presented prayer in the Greek Orthodox tradition of icons, and in the future will be featuring Muslim, Jewish, Islamic and Celtic prayer traditions. This year the series will end with an evening of conversation on 12-Step Spirituality as an Inspired Tradition.

Curious about Judaism?

"A Taste of Judaism: Are You Curious?" is a free, three-session class being offered for adults at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham with Rabbi Stephen Karol beginning Dec. 4 for three consecutive Monday evenings from7:30 to 9:30.

There is no enrollment fee, but pre-registration is required and space is limited. Call the UAHC-Northeast Council office at 781-449-0404 for more information and to register.

Students are invited to learn about Jewish perspectives on topics of spirituality, values and community.

These classes are designed for "beginners" with all religious backgrounds welcomed. Course content is not dependent upon any previous knowledge about Judaism. An informal atmosphere and skilled teachers, leading Reform rabbis and educators encourage free and lively discussions of Reform Judaism's approach to living in our rapidly changing society. Unaffiliated Jews, interfaith couples, children of interfaith couples, in-laws of Jews or anyone seeking more knowledge about Judaism, including individuals from other religious backgrounds, will find this course a good beginning.

"A Taste of Judaism: Are You Curious?" has been offered by the Union of American Hebrew Congregations (the Reform Movement) in various locations around the country. Individuals have registered for this class for a wide-variety of reasons. One women enrolled because she was a director of a nursing home seeing many Jewish patients. Another participant joined the class because as an African American women, she was concerned about growing black anti-Semitism in her community. Many participants came who had no current spiritual or faith connection. Others were Jews who had little or no connection to synagogue life and were looking for a "path" back into the Jewish community.

Old Ship labyrinth available to public

The Old Ship Labyrinth is now available for use by the public on the second Tuesday evening of each month from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Admission is free and all are invited to attend individually, with companions, or in groups. The labyrinth is located in the Old Ship Fellowship Hall across from the church at the rear of the Parish House, 107 Main St. in downtown Hingham.

WORSHIP NEWS

The process of "walking the labyrinth" on a Tuesday evening is meant to be an individual meditative experience. There will be no religious services on Tuesday evenings although there will be contemplative musical background to accompany the walks.

How do you walk a labyrinth? One begins at the entrance on the perimeter of the labyrinth following a path to the center, then retracing the winding path to the entrance. How quickly or in what spirit one walks and what one experiences during the walk differs with each walk and each person. Some walks may evoke a sense of healing or oneness. Others may simply be pleasant, relaxing walks.

At Old Ship the labyrinth is patterned into a terrazzo floor; the design is based on the labyrinth constructed in the 13th century French Cathedral of Chartres as part of the tradition of religious pilgrimage. Though that context was of course Christian, labyrinths of other designs can be found in many traditions. Walking a labyrinth, therefore, can be understood as a path of contemplation or prayer for people seeking the divine or seeking peace without regard to any particular religious tradition.

For more information, call the Old Ship Parish assistant or the Rev. Ken Read-Brown at (781) 749-1679.

own bills weren't factored into the budget equation," Buckley said. "The only way this could have happened was if the budget and expenses were not monitored."

Vanderweil defended the commission's method of including known expenses into its contingency fund by playing semantics. He said the commission considered line items for policing and landscaping as contingency items, "but they really weren't." Vanderweil said even with those line items already budgeted, the project still had a contingency fund of $558,000 left for change orders.

"We had $1.1 million in a contingency fund," he said. "We had a contingency plan as to how we would spend that money."

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Michael Sullivan criticized the commission's budgeting tactic.

"You had the money spent before the project began," said Sullivan.

"You couldn't tap into your contingency fund for your contingencies," added McMorris.

"We had planned and unplanned contingencies," Vanderweil responded. "I guess we shouldn't have called it a contingency fund."

Selectman Fred Koed, a former water commissioner, asked his colleagues to not be too harsh in their criticism. "We're Monday morning quarterbacking here," he said of the board's second guessing. "We're only 4 percent over on a $15 million project."

Selectmen were also critical over what they perceived as a "lack of oversight."

"It's not a case of slow financial tracking," McMorris said about the claim of late-arriving bills, "there was almost no financial tracking. Who was responsible for financial oversight of the plan?"

Callahan questioned the $315,000 worth of change orders Tutela billed itself for.

Vanderweil, who owns his own engineering firm, said he took it upon himself to watch over the project. "I'm used to overseeing this kind of project," he said. "Every month I'd get a bill from Tutela, every month I'd get a bill from the contractors, I'd get a statement with the amount we've authorized to spend...every few months we'd start to reconcile the amounts authorized and the amounts billed."

Vanderweil said he made sure the town was getting its value for any change orders that came through his desk. In total, Tutela's fees made up nearly 20 percent of the cost of the project — an amount Vanderweil was comfortable with.

"You have a lot more confidence in Tutela's numbers than I do," Callahan responded.

Sullivan criticized the lack of a second set of eyes on the project. "Tutela's not going to stand up and say they did something wrong, or there's a simpler way."

Vanderweil said he "felt bad" about needing to bring another appropriation article to a Town Meeting, but said the board needs to get behind the sewer commission so it can pay up.

"We have $15.6 million worth of hardware under the streets, and we have to pay for it one way or another," he said. "I hope the selectmen will get solidly behind us and go to bat for us."

Article 1 at the Nov. 13 Town Meeting will ask for the town's approval to borrow and spend $600,000 to finish the project. Approximately $250,000 is needed to fully pay the contractors for work done. More than $200,000 will be spent making the treatment plant more aesthetically pleasing and pay for landscaping around the plant and the pump stations spread out through town.

Buckley's thoughts on the sewer project deficit

TO SELECTMEN:

I am writing to you to convey my thoughts on the deficit we are faced with on the Central Cohasset sewer project.

To date the town has appropriated $15,516,800 in six separate Town Meeting votes. The first appropriation was an engineering article for $410,000 voted in October of 1994. This was followed in November 1995 with another engineering appropriation of $120,000. The largest appropriation of $13,496,800 was authorized in March of 1997. The following year, the town authorized $60,000 for Lily Pond Engineering and $130,000 for the Newtonville project. Finally, the March, 1999, Town Meeting appropriated $1,300,000 for the Lily Pond project. We are now being told that to complete the project we need another $200,000 and roughly $300,000 in additional funds to improve the aesthetics of the plant exterior and compound.

My first reaction is that a 1-percent overrun on a job of this complexity is unfortunate but understandable. I think had the sewer commission approached the board with this information in time for the October Town Meeting, this would have been the reaction of most people. Two hundred thousand dollars is a lot of money, but if it is borrowed and repaid at subsidized rates over a period of 20 years, it is a manageable sum. By the same token, another $300,000 to landscape and improve the buildings and pump stations, particularly if we can obtain subsidies seems reasonable. I could question why the plant, in the center of a beautiful town like Cohasset, was not originally designed with aesthetics in mind, but that would be off the subject.

However, this is only one person's impression of the severity of the situation, not an explanation of the events that led us here.

There were two main areas where this project went wrong. One happened before the first shovel hit the ground and the other during construction.

The first problem area was budgeting. Evidently, the original budget did not contain segregated line items for police details, plantings and aesthetics. Once those items were subtracted, the reserve for unforeseen situations was down to 3 percent, much too low for a project of this complexity. A much more desirable reserve would be 5 percent, with 10 percent optimal. The original plan was flawed in that known necessities were removed from the budget, which didn't leave the project with a real reserve. The subsequent drain on the contingency did not leave enough room for change orders, the second problem area.

As far as I can determine, there are change orders, either approved or pending, totaling $780,009.08. Of this $315,400 is for Tutela, $98,099.35 is for P. Gioioso's work on the plant and $377,289.48 is for J. D'Amico's work on the collection system. From this information, I can present the following table:

Original Contingency	$1,013,427.93
Less:
Tutela Change Orders	315,400.00
P. Gioioso Chg Orders	98,099.35
J. D'Amico Chg Orders	377,289.48
Paving Change Orders	10,000.00
Pumping Station Plans	17,000.00
Police Details	350,171.45
Legal & Other Costs	38,919.88
Total Draws on Contingency	$1,206,880.16
Deficit	($193,452.23)

I was not involved in either the original or supplemental budget decisions, so these numbers are not exact. I have provided them to you as an illustration of the situation.

One issue that I can't explain is the Lily Pond appropriation of $1,300,000 in March of 1999. J. D'Amico's change order for that job was $592,919.62 and Tutela's was $72,000. I may not have all the facts, because I do not have all of the change orders, but there seems to be a wide discrepancy between what was needed and appropriated. My recollection of the discussion surrounding the request was that the additional sums were needed for Lily Pond and not to supplement the downtown budget. Because of the wording of the article, any funds remaining were commingled with the larger proj3ect.

As I stated above, by itself, an overrun of this magnitude is understandable. That is why I was so disappointed by the performance of Tutela Engineering at your Oct. 10 meeting. Had they not pointed fingers at everyone involved, with the exception of themselves, and explained the events that led to an insufficient contingency and greater than anticipated change orders, I think there would have been some hand wringing, but not a reaction like we are now faced with. As of right now, I have grave doubts about whether the article will pass Town Meeting.

I would like to now take the opportunity to defend myself in regard to the discussion at the board's meeting two weeks ago. I don't think that anyone was intentionally antagonistic, but it may have appeared that way to the audience.

Ask anyone involved in this project, contractor, state financial officer, resident or town employee and they will tell that it is difficult to obtain information on the project from Tutela. As I write this memo, 24 hours have passed since I placed a call to the firm. The call has not been returned. Given that level of communication, it has been virtually impossible for me to monitor this project as I would have liked.

The sewer commission meeting of July 28 was attended by the assistant assessor, town manager, treasurer/collector and myself. We invited ourselves to talk about the time and interest on betterments for both the North and Central Cohasset projects. While we were in attendance, the commission began discussing a series of three change orders for Tutela Engineering. Before this time, none of us had been informed of the increases. The contract amendments, numbered 14 through 16, totaled $315,400 and added the following services.

Construction Services	$152,000
O&M Manual	30,000
Membrane Filtration
Evaluations	6,800
Route 3A	11,000
South Main St.	22,000
Smith/Ripley Rd.	7,800
Highland Ave.	6,400
Border St.	4,800
Black Horse Ln.	2,600
Lily Pond	72,000
Total	$315,400

Someone in attendance asked if the costs were justified and if there remained sufficient funds to provide for these change orders. Members of the commission assured the audience that budget concerns were unwarranted and that the increases had been carefully scrutinized.

When it came time for myself and the town manager to sign the change orders, we inquired about the budget situation. We were told by Dan Coughlin that there was a budget surplus of $150,000, enough to make aesthetic improvements to the plant's exterior. At no time were we told of the looming change orders for Gioioso and D'Amico. Though we asked, we were not told of the $98,099 in overruns for the plant and $377,289 in overruns for the collection system. These discussions took place during the last week of July, when a majority of the work that the change orders entailed had been approved in the field.

The assertion made by Dan Coughlin that a journal entry that I made impacted the deficit is nonsense. I did not design the project, supervise construction, act as clerk of the works, approve any change orders or manage the project. Tutela was contracted for a total of more than $2,900,000 for the Central project and $1,700,000 for the Straits Pond project to perform these functions for the town.

My office provides to every department in town regular budget reports. We are not infallible and neither are the other town departments. Therefore the reports are supposed to be reconciled by the responsible individuals and any changes or corrections are supposed to be reported back to my office. If we do not hear anything, we assume that everything is fine. When Ted Guild was on the commission, there was regular back and forth between us on the status of the commission's budgets, both operating and capital. In hindsight, I should have realized that when that stopped, something was wrong and that either the commission or Tutela had stopped reconciling.

The bills in question were for the Newtonville project, for which an appropriation of $130,000 was obtained. After the invoices were reviewed and signed by Tutela and the sewer commission, I processed payments of $79,128.82 for D&C Construction, $16,741.27 for Tutela and $1,096.66 to Deutsch, Williams, et al. At the time, I booked the article as a separate appropriation and charged the invoices to a separate account. At the close of the fiscal year, I recognized that Newtonville should be part of the larger project and made a journal entry to move the expenses.

If this indeed led to problems for Tutela, it tells me that they were not properly supervising the budget situation. Somehow, not only did the construction and legal invoices not get recorded, but in addition, six of their own bills were not factored into the budget equation. The only way that this could have happened was if the budget and expenses were not monitored.

Accident sends two to hospital

By Rick Collins

Cohasset firefighters work to free a Humarock woman from the wreckage of her BMW following a single-car accident on Rte. 3A.

Slick roads from the recent cold weather may have contributed to a single-car accident that resulted in a Scituate woman being trapped in her car for 45 minutes Monday on Route 3A in Cohasset.

Gretchen Fater, 51, of Central Avenue, Humarock, lost control of her 1987 BMW and smashed into a tree in front of 481 CJC Highway, said Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson.

According to responding officer Lisa Matos, witnesses reported seeing Fater hit her brakes and go into a skid. No one was able to say why she hit her brakes. Although police said Tuesday, Fater may have tried to avoid hitting a cat.

Two jaws-of-life were needed to cut the roof and driver-side door off Fater's vehicle. Fater suffered two broken legs, a broken pelvis, a broken clavicle and a laceration on her forehead, police said.. She was taken by MedFlight from Milliken Field to Beth Israel Hospital in Boston. Her passenger, John Stephenson, 54, also of Central Avenue in Humarock, was placed on a backboard and transported to South Shore Hospital in Weymouth where he was still being evaluated Tuesday. According to Jackson, Fater was conscious through the ordeal, but unable to speak much. She was listed in stable condition Tuesday, a Beth Israel hospital spokesman said.

The accident occurred at approximately 9:15 a.m. on the southbound lane of Route 3A. The road, said Jackson, was still wet from overnight drizzle and snow flurries.

According to Matos's report, the force of the impact caved the driver's side door in, trapping Fater. No other cars were involved in the accident.

COHASSET REVITALIZATION CORPORATION

(781) 383-2449 FAX 383-3334 87 Elm Street • Cohasset, MA 02025 cohrevitalize@aol.com

Who is CRC?

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) is a private, non-profit organization whose mission is to assist the Town of Cohasset implement infrastructure improvements in the village and harbor.

The CRC is in the process of establishing a nine-member board of directors, representing various community interests. The executive director of the organization is Dean Rizzo, past resident of the community, and past chairman of the Towns' Village Revitalization Task Force.

The CRC will be working in partnership with the Village Revitalization Task Force, as well as with other town officials, committees and boards, residents, local non-profit organizations and businesses.

Why was it Established?

The establishment of the CRC is designed to accelerate the revitalization effort, which began in the summer of 1996 by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, and subsequently strengthened by the Town of Cohasset through the appointment of the Village Revitalization Task Force in the winter of 1998.

Although the volunteer-run program had many successes, it often struggled with a lack of financial resources to undertake the necessary technical, design, and planning assistance needed to help solve the problems at hand. The CRC was created to accept private donations in order to hire professional planning and consulting agencies to assist the community in their revitalization objectives.

What Are the Goals of CRC?

The CRC has four primary objectives to help the community:

- Design and provide infrastructure and streetscape improvements in the village consisting of new sidewalks, street paving, improved parking, safer pedestrian and vehicle access & circulation, additional lighting and plantings, and improved signage.
- Design and provide infrastructure and streetscape improvements in the harbor consisting of an enhanced Captains' Walk to effectively link the public/private properties along the harbors edge; enliven the rich maritime history of the waterfront; as well as provide a clear and safe delineation between pedestrian, bicycle, and vehicle travel and access along Border Street.
- Improve the linkage between the village and harbor through better signage, and natural streetscape enhancements on connecting sidewalks and roadways.
- Develop a program to bury existing overhead utility lines in the village and harbor areas.

Who Will Make the Decisions?

Since the majority of the improvements will occur on Town of Cohasset property, the Board of Selectmen and Cohasset Town Meeting will have the final decision-making authority on proposals brought forward.

How Much?
Who Will Pay?
How Long Will it Take?

Though we are in the preliminary stages of knowing the exact answers to these questions, we are confident that the numbers and time frame will be in the following vicinity.

- We estimate the cost to complete the various objectives identified to be $ 7 – 7.5 million dollars.
- We anticipate the actual payment for these improvements to come from the following sources:
  - 59% from state & federal grants and funding programs
  - 23% from private investment
  - 18% from the Town of Cohasset
- We anticipate having the community consensus building process and the preliminary engineered design drawings completed for a presentation at the Spring 2001 Annual Town Meeting. Applications for funding will follow in an effort to begin construction in 2002 and 2003. Since much of the implementation relies on grant funding, the actual schedule will have to be flexible. A realistic time frame is to have significant improvements completed within 3-5 years, with additional items scheduled for completion within a 5-10 year window.

Village Workshop

Thursday, November 9th at 7:30 pm – Cohasset Town Hall

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the second in a series of community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The workshop will be held on Thursday, November 9th at 7:30 pm in the Town Hall Auditorium. The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will give a presentation on various design alternatives for such things as new sidewalks, better parking, improved vehicle and pedestrian access, and associated streetscape design alternatives. Many of the ideas to be presented are derived from the public input received to date on the project.

Your Participation is Important!

The CRC and the Town of Cohasset encourage community participation throughout the revitalization program to bring needed improvements to the Village and Harbor areas of the community. We encourage you to convey your questions, ideas, or comments to the CRC and/or the Village Revitalization Task Force of the Town of Cohasset. Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm Street (across from Kimball's).

Turkey tales

STAFF PHOTOS/CHRIS BERNSTEIN

Detail from "The First Thanksgiving at Plymouth," by Jennie Augusta Brownscombe on permanent display at the Pilgrim Hall Museum in Plymouth. The Museum is hosting a special Thanksgiving exhibit this year giving a special nod to the turkey..

Exhibit sheds new light on old traditions

Did you ever wonder why people eat turkey on Thanksgiving?

"The Great American Turkey," —a new exhibit at Plymouth's Pilgrim Hall Museum helps answer that question and others surrounding the holiday of gobbling.

"When it comes to celebrating Thanksgiving, people think more about turkey than they do about pilgrims," said Pilgrim Hall director Peggy Baker.

"Turkey is such a unifying thing."

The new exhibit features several turkey showpieces including postcards, magazines and newspaper covers, political advertisements, cookbooks, and popular literature.

Baker said there will also a display case full of different types turkeys including a chocolate turkey, a Beanie Baby turkey, a turkey made out of a big acorn, and even a "paper-honeycomb turkey."

The exhibit will also include a history and chronology of the traditional American turkey posted on panels in the display.

"This is a fun exhibit for everyone to come see," she said, "and I've had a lot of fun putting it together."

Thanksgiving displays are nothing new at the museum. Baker said she puts one on annually and has already planned exhibits for the next decade. Next year, Baker said she will focus the exhibit on the religious aspects of Thanksgiving.

"People from all over the world come to Plymouth on Thanksgiving," Baker said. "It's one of our busiest seasons here, and a really nice one. Thanksgiving is just one of those stories that has resonated with people for years. It has enduring significance, and so does the actual turkey that is traditionally eaten at the Thanksgiving table."

Baker learned some very interesting facts about the bird that nearly became our national symbol.

"The more I researched the topic of turkeys, the more interesting it got. For instance, I discovered that there are more forms of turkey that you can shake a stick at. And another interesting thing I found out from the National Turkey Federation was that 91 percent of Americans have turkey at Thanksgiving. That's a lot of people."

But why all the hype? How did it all begin? Why not pheasant, quail, or chicken?

Baker said the tradition started with the Spanish some 500 years ago. Baker said the Spanish were known for raising and domesticating turkeys in Mexico. Eventually, some of the Spanish people brought their turkeys back to Europe with them. Turkey dinners became popular abroad, especially in England, she said.

"It caught on really quickly. It's a known fact that turkeys were being raised in England in the year 1541. It was also known as a popular meal over there, especially during the Christmas season. So, when the pilgrims left to go to the new world, they already were well aware of turkeys."

Baker said in a document written by William Bradford, one of the more renown pilgrims, "he wrote about the available food sources when they got to America, and he specifically mentions wild turkeys. And we have every reason to believe that the pilgrims did have turkey to eat on what is now known as the first Thanksgiving."

Baker said the first Thanksgiving was held in 1621, and it was mainly a three-day feast in which the native Americans and the pilgrims shared their fruitful crops. It was a celebration of a good harvest which eventually turned into a yearly American ritual, as did the eating of

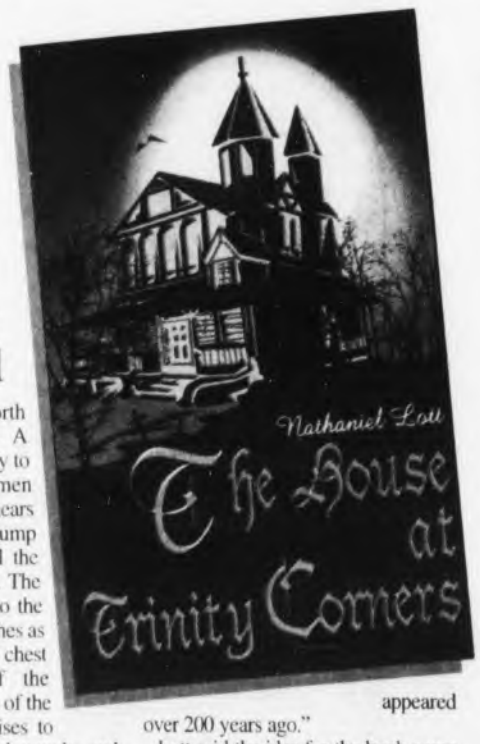
A Lott to write about

Former Marshfield resident pens book about lost South Shore gold

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM



While he calls California home today, Nathaniel Lott will be forever tied to Marshfield.

Lott's new book "The House at Trinity Corners," — a fictional account based on a real house near Marshfield's Ferry Street is what connects him to his former town.

"It's a beautiful old house that had such amenities like a walk-in fireplace," said Lott, a former bus driver turned author. "The house is still there, but the last time I was in Marshfield (about four years ago) I noticed it had changed a lot."

Lott, 72, said his new book is a tale which revolves around an event which took place more than 200 years ago.

A book jacket synopsis sets the stage for the drama within.

"In 1772, a ship comes to anchor at the mouth of the North River in Marshfield. A small boat makes its way to shore with three men aboard. When the boat nears the shore, the oarsmen jump into the water and pull the bow up onto the beach. The third men steps out onto the sand. He turns and watches as the seamen lift a small chest from the bottom of the boat…On the other side of the marsh, the riverbank rises to the edge of a darkened woods, and beyond the woods, a large New England colonial mansion sits at the top of the hill. Two men are murdered this night, shot in the back."

Lott is quick to point out that this is not a tale of horror.

"This is not a ghost story," Lott said. "It's a romantic tragedy which involves a search for the gold that disappeared over 200 years ago."

Lott said the idea for the book came to him when he lived in Marshfield from 1971-1976. At that time, he was working at a trucking company in Cambridge. He added within that time frame, he had taken a tour of the actual "Trinity Corners house" with a local real estate salesperson. He said that same salesperson had told him a story

How high can they go?

Home prices start to moderate

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

Real Estate

Home prices in some communities on the South Shore have begun to level off, according to some area real estate brokers, who say single-family home prices may have peaked for the year.

"I've seen some leveling off over the past four or five weeks, and even some price drops. There are more and more every day," said Jim Cotter, owner and principal of Mayflower Realty in Plymouth, which handles properties in Plymouth, Carver and Kingston.

"Almost every day, there are new prices on listings, sometimes five or six of them," said Cotter.

But Cotter said the change is more of a market adjustment than a real change in the market overall.

"Many of these houses were overpriced to begin with, but they were selling most of the time because inventory was so low. They aren't selling as quickly now," said Cotter, who believes buyers are balking at what they can get in a home for their money.

"And the problem with just going ahead and overpricing now is that when a house stays on (the market) for too long, it gets stale and no one wants to look at it," he said.

Cotter said that it's especially important now for sellers to listen to their broker when they recommend a price. "A seller can be their own worst enemy. If they don't take the advice of their broker and go for the gold, they could end up with silver," said Cotter.

Barbara Phillips of DeWolfe Realty in Marshfield agrees. "The buyers are out there, but they're not so grabby. The prices can only go so high, and they have been over inflated over the past several months, so there's bound to be a correction. Sellers have to be a little bit more careful about how they price their home."

Phillips said one exception is the very high-end properties. "The million-dollar and over properties, waterfront properties are still flying out the door at any price. When they have that kind of money to spend, they just want it," said Phillips.

Phillips said that in general, she's finding that inventory is up, also driving down prices a little bit. "This time last year, Pembroke had only 40

The 10-minute steak

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

There is nothing new about a skillet steak, a quality piece of beef sautéed over high heat in a hot skillet. But I was looking for a recipe that cooked the meat in under five minutes and which provided a thinner, more palatable portion of meat for those times when a thick hunk of sirloin is simply too much. In other words, I was looking for Tuesday night dinner — something fast, simple, and appetizing.

The first issue is the steak itself. Since I was looking for tender meat, I focused on two cuts: New York strip and rib eye, also known as Delmonico. The former had good flavor but was a bit tough; the rib eye, however, was tender, juicy, and also had great flavor. In the supermarket, I found that these steaks run between 3/4-inch and 1-inch thick. This was too much for truly quick cooking so I cut each steak in half horizontally. To make slicing easier, I recommend firming the steak (purchase boneless steaks) in the freezer for about 45 minutes and scoring the meat with a knife evenly around the perimeter. The final steaks are about 3/8-inch thick.

The next issue was the pan. I use a large sauté pan — at least 12 inches is necessary if you are cooking four portions (two steaks, each cut in half). It is crucial to properly heat the pan — at least 3 minutes on medium high is required. (The time will vary depending on the type of pan and your cooktop.) I decided on vegetable oil rather than butter or extra-virgin olive oil since butter burns easily and once heated and mixed with the sauce, even an expert can't tell the difference between oils. The thin steaks are seasoned, one tablespoon of oil is added to the hot pan, and then the steaks are sautéed. Do not move the steaks until a crust forms — about 90 seconds — since you will find that they initially stick to the pan.

Total cooking time was about 3 minutes but this will vary depending on the thickness of the steak and the heat of the pan. For such a thin cut of meat the easiest way to check for doneness is to poke the tip of a sharp knife into the center. Check them every 30 seconds since they cook quickly. (You want the steaks very rare in the middle at this point since they will go back into the pan with the sauce for an additional 30 seconds.)

The sauce is simple enough but I wanted strong flavors here, something to stand up to the full flavor of the meat. I started with vinegar, tarragon, and mustard. The first step was to deglaze the pan (remove the browned bits from the bottom) and I tested white and red balsamic vinegar, sherry vinegar, red and white wine vinegar, and apple cider vinegar. Although white balsamic vinegar was excellent, it is hard to find, so I settled on sherry plus a touch of lemon juice (which is added at the end) which was even better. I also added Dijon mustard along with the sherry and then, to finish, I whisked in 4 tablespoons of cold butter which slightly thickened the sauce and gave it a rich, smooth appearance and texture. The steaks were then added back to the pan along with the tarragon and I let the meat simmer in the sauce for 30 seconds. (I vastly preferred tarragon to thyme or parsley since it has a rich, bold flavor which adds depth and interest to this dish. Only fresh herbs will do for this dish.) An optional refinement is the addition of chopped shallots to the pan once the cooked steaks have been removed. I like to serve this dish with a vinegary salad with bitter greens such as escarole and, if you have the time and inclination, homemade fries are the perfect accompaniment.

10 MINUTE STEAKS

Do not overcook these steaks — they should be quite rare inside at the point they are removed from the pan. Avoid cast iron for this dish unless your skillet is very well seasoned. If you have time, freeze the steaks for 45 minutes to make them easier to slice.

2 3/4 to 1 inch thick rib eye steaks (boneless)
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon finely minced shallot, about 1 small
4 tablespoons sherry
1 teaspoon Dijon Mustard
1 tablespoon minced fresh tarragon or 2 teaspoons thyme or parsley
1 1/2 teaspoons fresh lemon juice
4 tablespoons cold unsalted butter cut into 1/2-inch cubes

1. Lay one steak on a cutting board. With a sharp knife make a score around the perimeter to evenly mark off two equal portions. Using the score as a guide, carefully slice the steak into two thinner steaks. Repeat with the other piece. Heat a large skillet (at least 12 inches) over medium-high heat for 5 minutes. Meanwhile, season the four thin steaks liberally with salt and pepper. When the pan is fully heated add the oil and swirl around to coat the surface of the pan. Add the steaks and cook, without moving for 90 seconds. Turn the steaks and cook for an additional 2-3 minutes or until desired doneness. (This recipe is best if steaks are still rare in the middle at this point. To check for doneness, poke the tip of a sharp knife into the center of the steak.) Remove the steaks to a warm platter or dinner plates.

2. Add the optional minced shallot to the pan and cook, stirring constantly, for 1 minute or until softened but not browned. Add the sherry and mustard and stir constantly for an additional minute scraping up any bits of browned meat remaining on the bottom of the pan. Remove the pan from the heat and add the lemon juice and butter stirring constantly until the butter is melted and the sauce is thick and glossy. Place steaks back in pan, add the chopped tarragon, and taste for seasonings, adding salt and pepper to t

Best barbecue in Beantown

Say goodbye to steak tips

By Al Stankus
ONC CORRESPONDENT

Chris Schlesinger is a transplanted Virginian. As a child of the South, he says, "I grew up in a barbecue culture."

The owner of the East Coast Grill in Cambridge, Schlesinger is one of the star chefs who have transformed Boston's eating habits over the past two decades through his restaurants, his cookbooks and as a culinary mentor. So he speaks with sad authority when he says, "New England may not have a barbecue culture."

But there is good news.

He continues, "But even without a barbecue culture, New England, and especially Boston, has a very high concentration of very good barbecue restaurants."

His point: geography is no longer destiny when it comes to great eating.

"Kansas City doesn't have a lobster or clam culture, but that doesn't mean you can't find a good clam roll there," he says. "Good food is where you find it."

When Schlesinger opened his Inman Square restaurant 15 years ago, a different kind of barbecue was part of the local dining culture. Even today at places like Tommy Floramo's and the New Bridge in Chelsea and the legendary Santarpio's in East Boston, signs in the window announce "barbecue," but what gets served inside doesn't have even a passing acquaintance with the wood required for the real thing. Boston BBQ circa 1985 meant grilled lamb and steak tips over gas-fired grills and ribs slow-cooked in the oven. The meat may have fallen of the bone, but that meat wasn't real barbecue.

Flash forward to Oct. 23. At his Cambridge base, Schlesinger welcomed 150 diners to the East Coast Grill & Raw Bar's second Annual BBQ Invitational. The flyer read, "Four teams, three courses… or is it really 12 courses?…. You decide the winner."

"I'll admit," says Schlesinger, "that I got the idea from Daryl Settles at Bob The Chef's. He used to hold a rib-off. So I changed the format to include beef brisket, an open pork category along with ribs."

So the word is in. There is great barbecue to be found in Boston, if you know where to look.

In addition to the East Coast Grill, there were BBQ teams from Blue Ribbon in West Newton and Arlington, Jake & Earl's in Waltham and Uncle Pete's from East Boston.

At 6:35, after a few plates of spicy wings, barbecued clams and deviled eggs had circulated, Schlesinger took the mike.

"We're here because there's so much good barbecue in Boston," he says.

A few shouts and some light applause greeted his statement. He wrinkled his brow, paused and said it again, only this time with more force and the 150 diners who were about to sample 12 plates of barbecue went concert-crowd crazy chanting "*bar*becue, *bar*becue, *bar*becue."

He introduced the four chefs and turned to Blue Ribbon's Chris Jankowski.

"Chris, I have one question I have to ask you: Where did you learn to cook barbecue?"

Jankowski laughs, takes the mike and says, "The East Coast Grill," and the barbecue hungry crowd sucks it up like the sauce on a big fat St. Louis rib.

Out came the ribs and throughout the room chef-type conversation followed almost every bite. Next, four plates of brisket and later the "open pork" category in which some cooks sent out traditional pulled pork and others added Latin spices, with one surrounding his with kernels of corn. Dave — "No last name please, people think I'm working" — is a self-described barbecue nut.

"I'm loving this," he says. "I travel the country to taste barbecue and believe me, what we're eating here is better than anything I've had in Kansas City. I'd even say it's as good as North Carolina."

When asked if it compares to Memphis barbecue, he laughs and says, "Talk to me next year, a group of us are going to Memphis in May, " referring to that city's legendary week-long BBQ festival.

At 8:50, after the last of 12 BBQ plates along with side dishes like cornbread, watermelon and white beans with ham hocks have been tasted, Schlesinger returns to the mike to announce the winners in each category along with the new grand champion.

Pete Cucchiara, owner and pitmaster at Uncle Pete's is standing at the bar with a Jack Daniels on the rocks. He's talking barbecue with someone when Schlesinger calls all the contestants to the stage. Holding the life-sized bust of Elvis — the grand prize for a night of work — Schlesinger announces that Uncle Pete's has won the rib category; and that Blue Ribbon garnered the most votes for its brisket. Pausing he said, "And in what I'd call a downright dominant display of barbecue power, Uncle Pete's is the winner of the open pork category which means Uncle Pete's is the champion."

Cucchiara smiles while the satiated crowd breaks into, "Pete, Pete, Pete, Pete, Pete."

In rounding up local barbecue, let's begin with the champ of the East Coast Grill & Raw Bar's 2nd Annual BBQ Invitational. Head through the tunnel and pass Santarpio's and then zoom past the entrance to Logan and take the next exit off Route 1 to East Boston's Day Square and you'll find Uncle Pete's at 309 Bennington Street.

Carved out of a former Dairy Queen, the room is a throwback. Diners sit in Naugahyde booths or at big tables covered with red-and-white vinyl tablecloths. The beer's cold and cheap and the spare ribs are lean, with a nice crunch on the outside that easily gives way to a sweet-tasting, pretty moist middle; the sauce on them is more smoky than hot. All plates come with a pair of side dishes. To the usual suspects — fries, cole slaw, baked beans — you can add mashed potatoes, ziti (hey, it's East Boston) and a very interesting Asian slaw made by Pete's wife, Pa, a native of Thailand.

With large portions and fair prices, Uncle Pete displays a real sense of barbecue culture. Mimicking the South, he knows BBQ fans like their barbecue to come with a bill that's about as big as the barbecue joint is pretentious

Redford's direction

Hollywood is an obstacle course even for an icon

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

It seems that Robert Redford has always been a movie star. Although most of us first took notice of him — stealing scenes from Paul Newman with his impossibly big, absolutely genuine smile — in 1967's "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," Redford had been plying his trade for almost a decade on the big screen. He played heels in "This Property Is Condemned" and "Inside Daisy Clover," deftly handled comedy in "Barefoot in the Park" and sizzled in the little-seen potboiler "The Chase." Before all of that, he was a staple of guest-starring spots on TV shows ranging from "The Twilight Zone" and "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" to "Perry Mason" and "Maverick."

But it wasn't until after his breakthrough as the Sundance Kid (real name: Harry Longbaugh), that Redford hit the big time with leads in "The Way We Were," "The Sting," "Out of Africa" and most recently "The Horse Whisperer," among many others.

Somewhere in the middle of all that, he decided to try working on the other side of the camera as well, grabbing Oscar gold the first time out for his direction of "Ordinary People." His newest — sixth — directorial effort is "The Legend of Bagger Vance," the story of a championship golfer (Matt Damon) who goes off to fight in World War I, and comes back so demoralized, he has no interest in the game … until he meets a mysterious, possibly mystical caddie (Will Smith), a man who might be able to turn his life around.

Making a film about a sport is nothing new to Redford, either as an actor or a director. He acted in "Downhill Racer" (skiing) and "The Natural" (baseball), and directed "A River Runs Through It" (fly-fishing).

"I've played a lot of sports in my life and I think sport is a wonderful tool to use in film, but I don't have a lot of interest in just a literal translation of a sport in film. I'm not interested in a golf movie because you can turn on a television and see golf — it's everywhere. But to use it as a metaphor for something else, then I get interested. Same with baseball, same with fly-fishing. I think skiing was the only one that I took straight across.

"I think using sport as a metaphor allows you to touch higher things," he adds. "And to put sport in a deeper context when it has to do with someone's personal journey or a journey of the soul. In this case golf was the best one of all because it's about a character's battle with himself. And there's no sport that carries that battle better than golf because what are you playing against? You're playing against yourself, and the only other element you're really dealing with outside of a ball and a club is nature."

Redford, stunningly handsome as a young man, is now 63. Yet even though his face is deeply lined and craggy, and his fingers and hands are wrinkled, handsome is still the operative word. And neither his dazzling blue eyes not his shiny golden hair get in the way. He also has a very relaxed demeanor, settling into a chair, leaning back and chatting about his films and himself, remaining at ease even when discussing some of the difficulties he's faced.

He acknowledges that even with the name he's carved out for himself as a big box office draw, it's always been a challenge for him to get certain movies made.

"I've fought a lot more than anyone would know," he admits. "I had to seek independent financing for 'A River Runs Through It' because the mainstream in Hollywood wasn't interested. Even on 'Ordinary People,' I had to trade that I would do another film as an actor if they would let me do that one as a director. One of the reasons for starting Sundance was to create something antithetical to what was out there, and a place for filmmakers to at least have a place to learn and work that isn't encumbered by that whole money and competition thing.

"But it doesn't make it any easier to get the films made because you're being judged now by the bottom line so much — what star do you have in your film? what factors do you have that are guarantees that we'll get the money back that's already too much money anyway?"

Redford is the first to admit that there are a lot of problems within the industry. He strongly feels that there are just too many unnecessary people overloading the Hollywood machine.

"When you add all the lawyers and managers and agents, and they all put their hands in and they want a piece of the action, suddenly you've got names on the screen that don't belong there, producers that don't produce. Add that all up and things get more and more costly. By the time you get to the starting gate of making the film, you're exhausted. And then you have to get into the marketing of the film."

As a working student of filmmaking, Redford continues to learn, grow, get better. On "Bagger Vance," he claims to have expanded his use of color and to have pushed his skill with the camera to a new level. As always, he pays a lot of attention to detail. For instance, the film takes place in the 1920s, so sharp-eyed viewers will notice a $5 bill that trades hands is vintage, with red serial numbers instead of green.

But still, Redford says he is confounded by the way the system works.

"The challenge now is to continue to make the movies that I find interesting against the formulas that have to come up in order to make the bottom line work," he says. "I don't know why I have not had an easy time of it. I do get them made, but they're not easy. The early films I made were real independent and were made for a million and a half dollars. Well, on that budget you're not gonna hurt anybody too bad and you're allowed to do it. But then you have to be very resourceful in the way you make it, which, by the way, I like."

Still, his career can only be considered a major success. Over the past couple of decades the honors having been piling up — a Directors Guild of America award for "Ordinary People," a Life Achievement award from the Screen Actors Guild, the Cecil B. DeMille award from the Hollywood Foreign Press Association. Way back in 1970 he was given the Man of the Year award by Hasty Pudding Theatricals in Cambridge. Redford remembers that one clearly.

"Well, I thought, 'This is so weird, I'm gonna go. Man of the Year? What the hell are they talking about? I'm gonna go see what they're talking about.' Well, I found out they just wanted to give me a hard time. But that was OK," he says, smiling.

"I don't think about the awards," he continues. "I have a really hard time looking back. A really hard time with retrospectives and lifetime achievement awards. Lately I'm very honored but at the same time I'm made very uneasy about it. Because I'm still goin'. There's a lot of stuff I want to do and I'm not ready to sit and put my feet up and look back. It's like you have grandkids … so I should start knitting? I'll know when it's time to stop, and I'm not ready yet."

"The Legend of Bagger Vance" opens nationally on Nov. 3.

Robert Redford says he's fought hard to make the films he wants to make.

turkey.

Then in 1796, Baker said Amelia Simmons "wrote the first American cook-book" which included the first recipe for turkey prepared with cranberry sauce.

"Turkey was kind of considered a ritual at that point in history," Baker said. "As more and more of the original settlers moved out of New England and to other parts of the country, they took that ritual with them. Now, Thanksgiving is one of the only days of the year when people make a conscious effort to think about what they are thankful for, and to sit down and be grateful with their families. Turkey is a symbol of all of that."

Other interesting turkey tidbits Baker uncovered include facts like the number of turkeys consumed around the globe — in 1996 it was 8 billion — and how many pounds of turkey Americans eat each year, the average is 18 pounds. Baker also learned that the French, the Italians, and the English also consume their fair share of the bird. Today turkeys are bred for consumption and there are more than 7,000 turkey farmers in the United States alone.

And raising turkeys isn't an easy task, Baker noted.

"Have you ever met a turkey? They are enormous birds that just require so much care. You really have to know what you're doing."

Benjamin Franklin was so partial to the bird that he would have lobbied to make it our national bird.

"I wish the bald eagle had not been chosen as the representative of our country...the turkey is a much more respectable bird, and withal a true original native of America," Franklin once said.

"I think people will really enjoy this," Baker said of the turkey exhibit. "It will give people a slightly different way of looking at the holiday, and they will begin to see the dozens of layers that are connected with the Thanksgiving story."

For more information on "The Great American Turkey" exhibit, call The Pilgrim Hall Museum at (508) 746-1620 or check out the website at www.pilgrimhall.org.

about the house which involved lost gold.

"My book is a work of fiction, but according to the real estate person I was talking to at that time, the part about the missing gold is non-fiction. The book is about a modern day guy who discovers certain clues about the gold, and who goes through other happenings along the way."

While it's received no critical review, Lott said he's been hearing good things from both acquaintances and strangers who have read the novel.

"A lot of my old friends from the South Shore have been telling me they loved it," Lott said. "I'm getting some pretty good feedback." Lott said one of the reasons the book is not exactly in the literary mainstream is because he has arranged a "print-on-demand" agreement with his publisher, Iuniverse.com. He explained he did not mass-produce the book, but when someone orders the book over the Internet, a copy is printed.

"I work with a print-on-demand company," he said. "In short, this book is basically self-published. The way I'm doing it is cheaper, and it gives me a chance to get some exposure. These days, it's tough to find someone to publish your novel when you're not a well-known author."

Lott's familiar with the publishing world as he has already released two other books — "The Love Song of J. Roscoe Plenty," and "The Eva Chronicles." Lott also has a new book coming out in January called "Powder Blue Cadillac." All of them are available only via the Internet.

A lifelong writer, Lott said he began focusing on making a career of it about ten years ago.

"I started taking some writing classes at a school in Connecticut in 1991, when I retired. Lott lived in Connecticut after leaving Marshfield in the mid-70s.

"I've actually been writing since I was 14, but I guess I never really concentrated on it until that point. I had actually written a manuscript about 20 years ago, but I don't have that one anymore."

Based on the early success of this latest work, Lott said he'd consider doing a local book signing.

"I want to see how things go, and I want to see how many people are reading these books," he said. "Book signings are very expensive, especially when all you're doing is self-publishing. If I can see that there's a pressing interest, I'd think about doing something like a book signing."

In the meantime, Lott hopes readers will check out "The House at Trinity Corners."

"It's pure entertainment, and a very romantic tragedy," he said. "I think of it as a very (Nathaniel) Hawthornian story."

Anyone interested in buying a copy of Lott's books can log onto websites like Borders.com, BarnesandNoble.com, or Amazon.com and purchase them at those locations. People who want to e-mail Lott with questions can do so at Firstlott@earthlink.net.

The Pinehills opens

Three hundred and eighty years after the Pilgrims settled in the New World — and only seven miles away — another new community, The Pinehills, is opening its doors, offering a new way to live, work and play on more than 3,000 acres of pine forest in Plymouth. More than 2,100 acres of open spaces with nature preserves, miles of trails and championship golf is the setting for homes, businesses, shops and a conference center resort. Located just 45 miles south of Boston and eight miles north of Cape Cod, The Pinehills offers convenient access via Route 3 and commuter rail.

The Pinehills' official opening Oct. 14 means that homebuyers can now visit one of seven new model homes, or reserve a home site on which to create a custom home. A trio of award-winning building companies, The Green Companies and two of New England's finest custom home builders, Kistler & Knapp and Whitman Homes, are creating the first three neighborhoods at The Pinehills. Homes nestle near open space with spectacular views of woods, horizon, meadows or golf. Home prices begin in the high $300,000s.

The Pinehills is based on the concept that some land is appropriate for preservation and some land is appropriate for building, and that by carefully choosing where and where not to build, a better environment can be created. Only 30 percent of the land will be built upon, with more than 2,100 acres set aside as open space with abundant opportunities for recreation, including miles of walking trails, nature preserves and up to four professionally designed golf courses. Already two courses are under construction. The Rees Jones course is scheduled to open late Spring 2001 and the Nicklaus Design course will open the following year.

"The town of Plymouth should be complimented for its vision for creating new open space zoning so that this spectacular land would not be subdivided cookie-cutter fashion. Instead, all that open space creates views for residents and businesses."

Tony Green, managing partner for The Pinehills

Tony Green, managing partner for The Pinehills, notes "The town of Plymouth should be complimented for its vision for creating new open space zoning so that this spectacular land would not be subdivided cookie-cutter fashion. Instead, all that open space creates views for residents and businesses." Recognizing the extensive environmental review and planning process ongoing since June, 1997, Green said, "I'm proud that we've taken the time with the town and state to set new standards for sensitive land use."

Once complete, The Pinehills will feature 2,854 homes nestled near open space within a variety of neighborhoods, a Village-on-the-Green of more than 100 acres for business, shops, homes and a conference center resort and recreational amenities. Here, you could come home early from work, play a round of golf or take a walk along a nature tail, then enjoy dinner or shopping at the Village-on-the-Green, all without having to leave the community.

The Pinehills is being created by the principals of New England Development, The Green Companies and Wallace Associates.

Model homes are open daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. In addition, on-site experts lead tours "behind the pines," which may be arranged upon request, including home and lifestyle workshops, road and home siting walks, builder neighborhood walks, historical tours and golf tours. For more information about The Pinehills, write to 33 Summerhouse Drive, Plymouth 02360; or call (508) 209-9000.

MainSpring House fund-raiser

A holiday festival performance of Charles Dickens' classic story "A Christmas Carol" will benefit the MainSpring House homeless shelter and The Charity Guild food pantry next month.

The special show, hosted by the Jack Conway Company, will be held Thursday, Nov. 30, at 7:30 p.m. at the Company Theatre (formerly the Nickerson Theater) in Norwell.

Tickets are $50 per person and the price includes an invitation to a pre-show reception at the theater beginning at 7 p.m. All proceeds from the performance will go to the two South Shore charitable organizations.

The Brockton Coalition for the Homeless operates MainSpring House in Brockton, which provides shelter, food, educational programs and counseling to individuals and families in need. MainSpring houses as many as 60 homeless individuals per night; Conway House in Middleboro provides shelter for13 homeless families in a residence on East Grove Street.

The Charity Guild Inc. is a Brockton-based non-profit organization that provides food, clothing and donated household items to low-income individuals and families throughout the region. The group operates a food pantry and thrift store on North Main Street. It receives no state funding and pays for its programs through the generous contributions of its members, area residents and local businesses.

Requests for tickets can be sent with payment to MainSpring/Charity Guild, c/o Jack Conway & Co., 137 Washington St., Norwell, 02061. For more information, call Chris Haraden at Conway, (781) 871-0080, Ext. 316.

Real estate license renewal program set for Nov. 7, 8 in Hanover

The Conway Country School of Real Estate will offer an intensive, two-day continuing-education program for real estate licensees Tuesday, Nov. 7, and Wednesday, Nov. 8, at the school's training center on Route 53 in Hanover.

The two-day event is open to all of the state's 125,000 licensed real estate agents — whether active or inactive — and will satisfy the state's requirement of 12 hours of continuing-education credit for license renewal.

"We are very pleased to be offering these courses for our own agents and for our colleagues," Chairman Jack Conway said in announcing the program. "A solid education is a very important part of providing good service to our customers, and we are hopeful that many agents will take advantage of this unique opportunity."

The classes, which run from 9:30 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. Tuesday and 9 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. Wednesday, will cover fair-housing policies, agency representation and environmental law, among other subjects. Participants may choose any or all of the six courses being offered to fulfill their license-renewal requirements, according to Education Director Norman LaRocque, and should make reservations in advance.

For more information and a registration form, call the school at (781) 826-0088. The cost is $10 per credit hour, and all classes will be held at the Conway Country School, 183 Columbia Rd. at the intersection of Routes 53 and 139 in Hanover.

How high can home prices go?

listings. Now there's 75."

But that varies from town to town, according to South Shore real estate brokers, who say overall, inventory is still low in most areas.

"This is about the lowest I've seen it in 18 years," said Cotter. "It's particularly bad for first-time homebuyers. Those homes are practically nonexistent," he said. Cotter said that the lowest-priced single-family home he has listed is a five-room ranch with one bath priced at $159,000.

"For a couple who just got approved for a mortgage at $100,000, I have nothing for them," he said.

Donna Wood, of the MacDonald & Wood Real Estate Group in Duxbury, said she has seen prices level off throughout most of the market with the exception of high-end homes.

"There's virtually no waterfront available on the South Shore right now, so those prices will remain high, but I'm seeing prices for first-time buyers here become more stable for the first time in a long time," said Wood, who said prices may have hit a ceiling.

In Duxbury, Wood has listed a two-bedroom ranch with a detached two-car garage on nearly an acre for $244,900.

"For Duxbury, that's a good price. It's become difficult to get into Duxbury for less than $300,000," she said.

Wood said there has been a slight increase in inventory, as well. "Hingham, for example, has more inventory than there was a while ago. But it isn't a dramatic jump," she said.

But Wood, who is president of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors, said that the leveling off of prices on the South Shore is not across the board. "There are communities that are still seeing prices go up. It varies from town to town, even from neighborhood to neighborhood," she said.

John Tronka, of Century 21 Annex Realty in Hanover, said he believes prices there are up from this time last year. "The market is strong and the homes certainly pricier than they were last year, and interest rates are better, so there are buyers out there," he said.

Tronka said that in Hanover, only two homes are currently listed for under $200,000. Of 61 currently listed in Hanover, 25 homes are in the $170,000 to $300,000 range, and the rest are over $300,000.

"Hanover is becoming very expensive and I'm not seeing the prices come down," he said.

Fantastic flowers and foliages for the fall landscape

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

It has long been my crusade to encourage gardeners of every ability to research their plants, preferably prior to purchase, to determine their cultural requirements and ultimate size, ensuring their suitability to their particular growing conditions.

Colorful autumn leaves came tumbling down as chilly, gusty breezes whisked away the remnants of summer and offered a sneak preview of the winter season ahead.

Green thumbs up

Tiny snowflakes swirled across the landscape, creating small, powdery patches here and there. For most gardeners, the season's first snowfall is greeted with mixed emotions. The harsh reality that the growing season has come to a close creates a sense of panic for some, like myself, as many potted plant orphans still line my back walkway and many tasks remain unfinished. Others welcome its arrival with a sense of relief, realizing that in a few short weeks the gardens will have been put to bed as the holiday season awaits.

It has long been my crusade to encourage gardeners of every ability to research their plants, preferably prior to purchase, to determine their cultural requirements and ultimate size, ensuring their suitability to their particular growing conditions. The acquisition of trees, shrubs and perennials, which offer multiple seasons of interest, especially for those with limited space, is another of my endless campaigns. The flowers of a great many plants, no matter how spectacular, tend to be present for only a brief period. A plant's foliage and form, color and texture, are observed throughout the growing season and often persist year-round.

When planning or planting a new garden or landscape, plants which provide fall and winter interest should be considered of primary importance. Beauty from flowers and foliage is relatively easy to create in spring and summer, but during the fall and winter months, much of our scenery tends to fade, becoming a monochromatic shade of brown. Colorful evergreens tinted blue, yellow, bronze or a lustrous green accompanied by plants which produce brilliant orange, red or yellow fruits interspersed with others which offer texture, sound, motion, or a pleasing form, will greatly enhance the fall and winter

Susie Schollin

Coldwell Banker Hunneman is proud to honor Susie Schollin as the top selling agent for the month of September. With over 20 years of real estate experience, Susie has earned a reputation for providing her customers and clients with the highest level of service and integrity.

"The year 2000 has proven to be Susan Schollin's most successful year of her long career as a Realtor. Her consistent hard work and friendly manner keep her customers returning to her. What impresses me most about Susie's sales this year is that they are not concentrated in just one location. Her sales are spread throughout the South Shore, from Quincy to Plymouth, which is attributed to her determination to find her customers what they are looking for," commented Erica Ford, Office Manager.

For professional assistance with your real estate needs, or for more information on her new listing below, call Susie at 781-545-4900.

Grand Tudor mansion

With water views from almost every room, this grand Tudor mansion was once the home of John Fitzgerald — the legendary HoneyFitz, former mayor of Boston and grandfather of President John F. Kennedy.

Inside are 15 rooms, including seven bedrooms and five full baths, and more than 7,400 square feet of living area. The home was built in 1892 and features hardwood floors and an abundance of magnificent original wood detailing and panels throughout. The 18-foot-by-29-foot fireplaced living room and the fireplaced dining room with stag antler chandeliers include original detailed wood carving and bulls-eye glass in some of the windows. Both rooms offer remarkable views of Boston Light and Allerton Harbor.

Other notable features of this historic home include an elegant foyer with a massive fireplace, a two-story third floor game room, and a 15-foot-by-23-foot kitchen with wood cabinets, fireplace and pantry.

Located 20 miles southeast of Boston in the residential town of Hull, this impressive residence offers gracious surroundings, as well as the convenience of easy access to the city by commuter boat.

Information is current as of October 30, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%--5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM--adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV--loan to value. MI--mortgage insurance. NA--not available. NQ--rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. To calculate your exact mortgage payments using our electronic payment calculator, and for other extensive mortgage, real estate, consumer financial information--including tips and definitions of terms--please visit our websites at www.cnsweb.com. A 'hidden city' fare

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. Can you explain something to me? I tried booking a one-way ticket from New York to Milan in business class on the British Airways Web site at www.britishairways.com and it priced out at $2,541, traveling via London. But when I priced a one-way on the same dates New York-London on BA, the fare was $3,377, even though Milan is farther away and connects through London.

What's going on here, and is there any reason why next time I fly to London I can't buy a seat from New York to Milan at the lower price and just not show up for my Milan-London flight?

A. What's going on here is a "hidden city" fare. It's often the case that when an airline wants to entice travelers to fly through a hub airport to a more distant city they'll offer an attractive fare. Airlines frown, to say the least, on people "abusing" these fares, and may penalize a travel agent who sells a New York-Milan ticket if the passenger gets off in London by charging the agent the fare difference. So, if you use this strategy (and I'm not encouraging you to), then buy the ticket online, not through your agent. A hidden city fare doesn't work in reverse since if you don't show up for your Milan-London flight your London-New York reservation will be canceled.

Q. How can I find out if a travel firm is legitimate or not? I have been planning a trip to Playa del Carmen in Mexico and am thinking of booking through a company I found on the Web. I got some preliminary information on them and I have been in phone and fax contact with them. They are based in Las Vegas, but I have been working with the office out of British Columbia. How can I be sure there will really be a trip on the other end?

A. There's an added element of risk when you deal with a company on the Internet that is far away from where you live and you're dealing with people you've never met. You might want to ask a couple of local travel agents to see if they can beat the price you've gotten on the Internet. To play it safe, see if they are affiliated with the US Tour Operators Association or ASTA, the American Society of Travel Agents. You should also check with the Better Business Bureau in Las Vegas.

Other precautions: Pay with a credit card (if they won't accept credit cards, head for the nearest exit) since if you don't get what you pay for, you can contest the charges with the card issuer.

Once you've booked the trip, wait a week or two and call the hotel and airline and see if there's a booking made in your name. If not, find out why.

Finally, consider buying travel insurance — not from the travel firm itself but from a third party like Access America or TravelGuard.

Q. For the first time, I purchased airline tickets online through priceline.com on American Airlines. I received confirmation of the flights, times and fare, and was relatively pleased. However, twice since that time I have received online messages informing me that the airline had changed my itinerary. Still the same dates, but the departure times had changed. Both times it increased the delay between connecting flights, not a choice I would have made.

Do they have a right to do that, or is the original reservation a contract that cannot be violated?

A. I've received so many complaints about Priceline.com that I'm beginning to wonder (I could write an entire column with readers' letters of woe).

If you had tried to change your itinerary after booking Priceline would have said, "No way!" But, they can feel free to change yours — not fair. The original reservation is not a contract, however, and airlines do change flight schedules at times. You might try to go standby on an earlier connecting flight if there is one on the same airline.

Again, although Priceline's fares (and rental car rates) are very good, you might do just as well waiting for a bargain fare on an airline Web site or elsewhere.

Q. A friend told me she read in your column about discount European airlines that leave from London to the rest of Europe with amazing fares. Can you tell me what they were?

George Hobica

A. The fares truly are amazing, some under $10 round-trip, if you book online. Try these three Web sites: www.easyjet.com, www.ryanair.com and www.go-fly.com landscape providing color and interest at a time when we yearn for it most. Focus these cold season plantings in areas which can be readily viewed from windows. Spring and summer flowering plants will be easy to integrate once the backbone of attractive cold weather plants is established.

Few trees rival the colorful splendor of our native maples as their leaves produce a broad palette of glorious shades. Brilliant reds, yellows, golds and oranges are irresistible during the fall season. Both the swamp maple (Acer rubrum) and the sugar maple (Acer saccharum) produce a kaleidoscope of bountiful color. The broad leaves of the Norway maple (A. platanoides) tend to develop their yellow color later in the season. Many of these vigorous varieties of maples pose considerable challenges for gardeners as they cast significant shade, seed prolifically and are extremely superficially rooted, usually winning all wars for moisture and nutrients. Few plants can successfully compete with their greedy roots, particularly during periods of drought, and once their large leaves drop, they tend to mat when they become wet, suffocating underlying grass and plants. On larger properties, they may serve as excellent perimeter plants but may not be ideal for smaller landscapes.

Few trees rival the colorful splendor of our native maples as their leaves produce a broad palette of glorious shades. Brilliant reds, yellows, golds and oranges are irresistible during the fall season.

Several members of the maple family offer excellent alternatives to their larger cousins providing attractive fall foliage, smaller stature and less competition with surrounding plants. A personal favorite is the handsome paperbark maple (A. griseum) which boasts brilliant scarlet leaves in autumn. This slow-growing specimen has the added attraction, as its name suggests, of exhibiting exquisite, ornamental, peeling bark which is cinnamon in color, providing textural interest once its leaves have fallen.

Numerous varieties of Japanese maples (A. palmatum) make ideal candidates for gardens and landscapes with deeply-lobed leaves which may be green, burgundy or variegated during the warmer months changing to flaming red or yellow as the autumn season progresses. A few cultivars have the added bonus of colorful bark including the cultivar "Senkaki" which produces brilliant coral-red twigs in colder weather, highlighted by intense golden-yellow foliage in autumn creating a stunning contrast with its vibrantly tinted bark. The majority of these fine, ornamental specimens are restrained in growth and moisture requirements, their divided foliage allowing more light to filter through which enables plants and grass to grow beneath them.

Many other species of trees produce showy autumn leaves including dogwoods, ashes, birches, and sassafras. Some of these trees, particularly our larger natives, may be best left to grow and enjoy in the wild due to their giant stature. Other smaller trees make handsome additions to the landscape. Serviceberry or shadblow (Amelanchier spp.) produces small white flowers in early spring and magnificent red and yellow leaves in fall. Sourwood (Oxydendrum) is another spectacular tree which blooms in late summer with white clusters which resemble spring-blooming andromedas, its leaves turning brilliant scarlet in autumn.

Hedlund wins big in Cohasset

Senator fends off Cantwell challenge

By Jean Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

As the presidential race plunged to a horserace finish, Republican incumbent Robert Hedlund retained his seat in the state Senate by a narrow margin of 3,046 votes over Democratic challenger James Cantwell.

The mood at Hedlund's celebration at the China Coast Restaurant in Hingham was boisterous as the senator gave his victory speech.

As he was taking the podium, nearly 100 supporters from all over the South Shore shouted in unison "We're with Bob."

"We may not have appealed to everyone but we appealed to the majority," Hedlund said.

In referring to Cantwell's campaign, Hedlund said, "They threw everything at us but the kitchen sink. They resorted to name calling and sign stealing.

Bradley takes state rep seat

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After more than three years of door-knocking, campaigning and smiling, Democrat Garrett Bradley fulfilled his goal Tuesday, and secured his seat on Beacon Hill as state representative for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

Bradley held off a challenge from Republican Mary Anne McKenna of Hingham and independent Walter Murray of Hull, in the race to replace the retiring Mary Jeanette Murray, and won 12,145 to 7,766 votes. Walter Murray received a total of 890 votes.

In Cohasset, Bradley won by the narrowest margins, 2,123 votes to 2,024 out of 4,460 total votes cast. Murray took home 133 ballots. McKenna actually won heavily-Republican District 1 with a vote of 1,109 to 1,008. However in District 2, Bradley was able to slip out a 200-vote win to take the town.

Bradley took all five districts in Hingham for a 6,527 to 4,386 vote victory. A total of 11,618 ballots were cast in that town. Murray received the nod from 240 voters. The closest contest was in the fifth precinct where Bradley won 1,187 to McKenna's 909 votes.

Bradley also took Hull with 3,495 votes to McKenna's 1,356 and Murray's 517.

Results from Hingham and Cohasset were posted at Bradley's party headquarters at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall shortly before 9 p.m., and showed Bradley with a 2,300 vote lead with Democratic strong-hold Hull still to come.

A half hour later, WATD radio reported McKenna had called to

Sewer overrun, Greenbush to be debated at Nov. 13 Town Meeting

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

When Town Moderator George Marlette brings the gavel down to start Monday night's special Town Meeting, it will be the second time he's done so in the past 21 days.

Just three weeks after the town raced through a 28-item agenda in less than two hours, residents will gather once again at 7 p.m. Monday in the middle-high school auditorium. But this time voters shouldn't expect a such a speedy meeting. There are four articles – two of which are controversial and could stir considerable debate.

Leading the agenda is the article asking to authorize the sewer commission to spend an extra $600,000 to finish the town's Central Cohasset sewer project. With a price tag already pushing $16 million, the extra money is needed to finish paying the project's contractors, its police detail bill, and make the needed aesthetic improvements to the treatment plant and sewer pumps spread throughout the town.

The commission will ask for $600,000 to finish the Central Cohasset sewer project.

Town sewer commissioners revealed the shortfall to selectmen Oct. 10 — weeks past the deadline to put an article on the Oct. 23 Special Town Meeting warrant. Commissioners said they didn't realize the project was in financial trouble until the week before

According to the commission and Tutela Engineering, the project accumulated almost $800,000 in change orders, which ate through the $1 million contingency fund set up to cover overruns. The commission also blamed the shortfall on higher than anticipated police detail costs, additional engineering studies and needed aesthetic improvements.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said at last week's selectmen's meeting that the town has no

Survey: town's open space good but could be better

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset's open space and recreational land received a thumbs-up from town residents in a recent survey. However, more than half of respondents want the town to provide more recreational opportunities for Cohasset residents.

The survey, conducted by the town's Open Space Committee, was sent out along with tax bills earlier this year to more than 2,500 homes. According to committee chairman Deborah Cook, 509 households returned the survey for a 16 percent rate of return – high for a survey of this kind.

According to the survey, more than half of those responding used one of the town's beaches (91 percent, with 88 percent using Sandy Beach); the harbor area (60 percent); Turkey Hill (52 percent) or Wheelwright Park (50 percent) within the past year.

"It shows that people really utilize the town's parkland," said Cook. "The only one under used is Brewster Woods." Just 18 percent of respondents said they had used Brewster Woods, located behind Town Hall, this past year.

But despite the high usage level of the town's recreational land and open space areas, 54 percent of Cohasset residents believe it's "very important" for the town to acquire more open space, and only 44 percent said they were "satisfied" with the town's recreational facilities.

"There is a very strong interest in town to preserve open space and hope to be able to preserve more," said Cook.

Of course, ideally, residents hope any land purchase could be paid for by someone else, with 77 percent saying they would support the acquisition of land with state and federal money, and 51 percent wanted a fund set up people could contribute to. Just 48 percent said they'd support the purchase of land with town funds.

A majority of respondents (72 percent) said they wanted to see the creation of a walkway on Jerusalem

Beechwood water mains to be flushed

The Cohasset Water Department will flush water mains on Beechwood Street, from Route 3A to Doane Street and including Doane Street, the week of Nov. 13.

"Flushing water mains improves water quality and increases water flow," said John McNabb, chairman of the water commission. "However, during the flushing the residents of the affected area may experience discolored water, and should take care to avoid washing clothing during the flushing."

Residents are also advised that the discolored water is safe to drink, that the discoloration will not last long, and that if discoloration occurs they should run an outside faucet until the water runs clear. Running the outside faucet will not take long and does not use a lot of water.

"While we still cannot do system-wide flushing until the new water tank is completed," McNabb said, "we have devised a way to flush a section of the system, which we chose to do as soon as possible to benefit our customers."

"The Scituate Hill water tank is almost completed," McNabb said. "Once the new tank is completed and on-line, by next spring, we will be able to have annual flushing programs that will improve water quality through Cohasset."

All residents of the affected area will receive a notice at least 24 hours before the flushing begins. If anyone has any questions call the water department at 383-0057.

Food drive planned

The CHS student group, the Social Awareness Organization, has been participating in many recent activities in the community. In early October, members took part in the Making Strides Against Breast Cancer walk in Boston, as well as a walk benefiting the SIDS foundation in Hingham. They are planning more events in the upcoming weeks, including food and clothing drives planned for November and December.

There will be drop-off bins for both drives located at the main entrances of the Cohasset High School. The students would appreciate any help or support the community could offer.

Exact dates will be announced in coming weeks. The SAO will be continually updating their activities throughout the year to keep the community informed.

Brush chipping

Residential brush will be accepted at the DPW parking area Saturday, Nov. 18, from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. No trees more than 12 inches in diameter. No contractors.

Subscription increases

TO OUR READERS,

Beginning next week, our home delivery and newsstand prices will increase. Despite significant postal and newsprint increases during the coming year, and other ongoing expense increases, we have limited the home delivery increase to less than 10 cents per week, bringing our annual rate to $35. This increase will be effective upon renewal of your subscription.

Our newsstand price will increase to $1, with a portion of the increase directed to the retailer. If you have any questions that we can help answer, do not hesitate to contact our Customer Service Department at (800) 982-4023. Thank you for your support of The Cohasset Mariner.

Town meeting to decide fate of train right-of-way

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For the second time in three years, Cohasset residents will vote whether to designate the Greenbush right-of-way as parkland, in an effort to gain negotiating leverage with the MBTA.

The vote is scheduled to take place at Monday's special Town Meeting, slated to begin at 7 p.m. at the Cohasset Middle/High School auditorium. This is the second special Town Meeting in three weeks.

A similar article at a 1998 Town Meeting failed to receive the two-thirds vote needed for passage. Many town residents thought the move obstructionist, a claim Greenbush Mitigation Committee Chiarman Thomas Gruber whole heartedly denies.

"It absolutely is not obstructionist," he said. "We did this once before...The misconception was that it was 11th hour shenanigans, a desperation move. That absolutely is not what it is."

The goal of the move is to force the MBTA to pay the town for the right-of-way, which Cohasset purchased from the MBTA in 1982 for $132,000. The MBTA contends it doesn't have to pay the town anything.

"The town just wants to get fair-market value, " Town Manager Mark Haddad said. "The T says they don't have to [pay for it], that they have the right to take it. We think the town should get something for it. The town's tax dollars were used to purchase it."

Haddad was able to trace the land's purchase back to a 1982 Town Meeting vote, but was unable to find anything regarding why the town purchased it. Gruber said the only thing the town has regarding its purchase intent is how the land is used now.

"We think the town should get something for it. The town's tax dollars were used to purchase it."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

"It's currently used as a walking path in a lot of its sections. It's a green buffer," he said. "I walk it quite frequently myself. Kids use it as a shortcut to school.

"This is just something to protect an asset of the town. We paid for it, we're entitled to compensation."

The designation is not the same thing as rezoning the land, said Gruber. The right-of-way part of the open space zoning designation in town. "A parkland designation is a state designation that has nothing to do with zoning," said Gruber. "We're changing the name of it to a park. The official change is important to the state." He said a two-thirds vote by both houses of the Legislature is needed for the state to seize parkland. "It's a way to get some additional leverage," Gruber added.

Haddad is currently in the process of hiring an assessor to appraise the land. In a letter sent to the Mariner this week, (see letters to the editor) Gruber said the town could receive anywhere from the $132,000 it paid for it, to the valuation if the land was attached to its abutters. This latter value could be as much as $2 million.

"Whether or not you are for or against the train is not the issue," Gruber wrote in his letter. "The issue is whether our town is due just compensation when land it rightfully purchased is taken for a public works project."

Greenbush is the proposed third leg of the Old Colony commuter rail line, that would end in Scituate and travel through Cohasset, Hingham and Weymouth. The Plymouth and Middleboro branches have already been restored. Cohasset has not had active passenger rail service since the 1950s.

Road and Atlantic Avenue, presumably to take advantage of the sweeping vistas of Massachusetts Bay.

Other suggestions included a town indoor pool (45 votes), new playgrounds (26), new sidewalks (16), creation of a ice skating/hockey rink (13), more boat slips/moorings (13), and more bike paths (12).

The survey was commissioned by the Open Space Committee which is in the process of putting together the town's "Open Space and Recreation Plan" that is required by the state every five years. "The plan is supposed to drive the decision on land to acquire," said Cook. "The state (Executive Office of Environmental Affairs) looks at the plan when deliberating grants to see if it's on the plan, to see if the plan is defined and warranted."

Cook hopes to start circulating written drafts throughout the town in January, giving the committee plenty of time to make final corrections by the June due-date. Cook said the report itself is expected to be about 40 pages, with "lot of addendums."

The committee currently is looking at a build-out analysis of the town, with assessor's lines overlaid on it in order to "identify large tracts of available land."

The next Open Space Committee meeting is scheduled for Dec. 6.

Special Town Meeting is Monday

choice but "hold their noses and vote for it" because the work has been done and the bills need to be paid.

The other article that is likely to be controversial would designate the town-owned Greenbush right-of-way as "parkland" (see related story).

Remaining articles would authorize the town to sign a five-year agreement with the Bourne Regional Waste Management Facility, for the disposal of the town's construction and demolition materials and would allow the town to purchase the "Barnes Property" off Forest Street.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the 32-acre Barnes parcel located adjacent to Wheelwright Park, would provide a "nice expansion" of the park. However, Haddad was doubtful that enough information would be available to warrant a vote. Marlette expects the article to be dropped.

Turnout level is uncertain, said Marlette now in his tenth year as town moderator.

"Some feel it will be very well attended because of the sewer article, and others feel we've talked it to death and there will be a real low turnout," he said. A minimum of 100 people are needed for a quorum.

Marlette also added that, as of now, he doesn't plan on putting a time limit on discussion of the sewer article because of its complexity. "I've been asked questions on the debate and no, I will not be placing limits on discussion," he said. "There will be great latitude as long as the question is relative...There's got to be some connection."

He doesn't believe voters should just say "It's a bill that needs to be paid, so let's pay it," and said how this article is handled could set a precedent for similar articles in the future.

The meeting will not be continued to Tuesday. If more time is needed, Town Meeting will reconvene the following week. Marlette cautioned that even though last month's Town Meeting went through its 28-article agenda in 90 minutes, it isn't unthinkable that it will take four hours to go through the four article agenda Monday.

"We once blew through the budget in 10 minutes and then spent an hour on what constitutes a public sitting tree," he said.

Nov. 10 flu clinic postponed

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League of Cohasset are postponing the flu clinics which were scheduled for Nov. 10. Due to the delay in delivery of the remainder of the flu vaccine, the clinics will be rescheduled for late November or early in December.

Peter Davenport Jarnot makes an entrance

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

NEW ARRIVAL

I would like to start the news this week with the wonderful addition of a baby boy! Peter Davenport Jarnot was born on Oct. 27, 2000 to Heather (Davenport) Jarnot and her husband Kevin. Heather was a CHS graduate in the year of 1986. Bob Davenport, Heather's Dad is thrilled with the newest addition to the family. Peter joins his brother Thomas at his home on Black Beech Lane in Scituate and is the newest cousin to William and Julia, the children of Bill Davenport (CHS '83) and his wife Shalagh. Congratulations to all of you!

FRIENDS WILL BE MISSED

As I am writing this week's column, I am looking out the window and admiring the colors of the leaves and the fresh, crisp look of the outdoors. I am also reminded of how quickly things can change, the weather that changes each day and life, that can change in an instance. This past week brought the deaths of three well-known Cohasset residents, Robert Ripley, Jimmy McGee and Virginia Anderson. To the families and friends of these wonderful people, please know that we are all thinking of you in this sad time.

Whether a person has been sick for a time or are taken away suddenly, the pain and sadness is huge. Take each day and enjoy it to its fullest, make sure to let everyone around you know how much you care and put aside some of the negative things for a while if you can. Also, try to pass some of this on to your children, a kind word to someone in need, an extra show of love or just a special time for you and your child all go a long way in sharing and teaching about love, caring and life. If all of us take a little bit of time to share some of the caring and love that we have inside, it will truly make a difference.

MISSING CHAIRS

The Second Congregational Church needs your help! The church is missing about 70 of it's gray (taupe) metal folding chairs that it customarily lends out as requested. Sometimes the chairs get passed around and now the church just doesn't know where they have ended up. The chairs are stamped under the seat with "Second Congregational Church." If you know of the whereabouts of any of the chairs, please call 383-0345.

TRINITY SOCCER

We have some more news about some Cohasset soccer stars making the news again at Trinity College! Senior tri-captain forward Brett MacQuarrie scored a goal and added an assist in the college's recent 2-0 shutout of Clark University. Sophomore Morgan Sandell finished the season as the team's leading scorer with five goals and an assist for 11 points. Brett finished the season for the Bantams with a total of five points on two goals and an assist. The Bantams split their last two games of the 2000 season with the win over Clark and a 3-0 loss to Amherst College. Great playing, guys!

GARDEN CLUB AWARD

Ann Pompeo, president of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset, displays the latest award the club received from the National Council of State Garden Clubs for the club's work on the garden at the Lightkeepers Residence. "The Harriet Field Award in Landscape Design" is awarded to the club that is the most outstanding liaison in civic development, conservation and landscape design. The plaque Pompeo is holding honors all New England recipients from 1980-2000.

JINGLE BELL WALK CANCELLED

Just a note to all about the annual Jingle Bell Walk for this year. This event will not be taking place due to personal circumstances. Many thanks go out to the organizers and supporters of this wonderful event over the last five years and hopefully, it will return next year.

MEN'S CLOTHING DRIVE

Calling all men out there! A clothing drive will be held at St. Anthony parish this coming weekend of Nov.12. The drive will be conducted for men's fall and winter clothing to be distributed to the homeless and poor adults at the Saint Francis shelter in Boston. Saint Frances house is a non-profit, non-sectarian comprehensive shelter with rehabilitative programs for homeless men and woman, ages 18 and older. Currently, the shelter has no need for woman or children's clothing. The following is a list of items that are needed: men's jeans and casual pants, fall and winter coats and jackets, sweatshirts and sweaters, white and blue dress shirts and black or gray dress pants for job interviews, dress shoes, belts, hats, gloves or scarves, white tube socks, T-shirts and underwear(new), long underwear and any larger sized men's clothing. Also needed are toiletry products that are unopened such as: deodorant, shampoo, toothbrushes and combs. The clothing can be dropped off at St. Anthony's Parish center on Saturday, Nov 11 from 4-7 p.m. or Sunday, Nov 12 from 7:30 am -1:30 p.m. Please do not drop off any clothing at any of the parish facilities until these dates. Please call Paul Rooney at 383-6363 with any questions.

ARTICLE PUBLISHED

I have a great piece of news to share about a young man in our community. Sam Game, a third-grade student at the Osgood School had an article published in the Fall 2000 issue of the children's science magazine "Scientific American Explorations." It's titled "What makes Long-Lasting Bubbles?" and is about an experiment he conducted. What a great accomplishment Sam, I am sure your parents and friends are super proud of you. I know that we all are.

THANKS, WALLACE

Well, as many of you know, this Saturday is the last soccer game of the fall season and all of us would like to extend a huge thank you to Wallace St. John for all of his work as the Cohasset Soccer Club coordinator. Wallace works very hard at this position, sometimes putting in 20 plus hours a week in this volunteer role. Keep in mind, Wallace also runs his own business on top of all of this. Wallace does this in part because he has a true love for children and amazingly, knows most of them by name. This year, there were nearly 650 kids playing, which means lots of paperwork to process, not to mention the challenges of scheduling and keeping all of us parents happy.(definitely not an easy task!) I also want to send a special thanks to all the coaches, volunteers and students who work also on a volunteer capacity. Thank you to all of you, it was definitely a wonderful season of soccer for all!

CLARK TO BE HONORED

I would like to end this week's column with an invitation to all of you. The Clark Chatterton Honor Committee cordially invites you to attend the Thanksgiving football game at Alumni Field at 10 a.m. on Thursday, Nov. 23, when, at halftime, Clark will be honored. In addition, the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund has been established. This fund will be available to all Cohasset Middle/High School athletic teams and activities to purchase those items which are not supported through the regular process. The fund-raiser will be threefold: 1. a kickoff one-time drive, 2. an annual 6K walk/run on the morning of Homecoming and 3. an annual Music Circus show with a block of tickets available to the public with an amount added to the Memorial Fund. Contributions to the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund can be made: c/o Jack DeLorenzo, Cohasset Middle/High School, 143 Pond St., Cohasset MA 02025.

NOV. 10 FLU CLINIC POSTPONED

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League of Cohasset are postponing the flu clinic which was scheduled for Nov. 10. Due to the delay in delivery of the remainder of the flu vaccine, the clinics will be rescheduled for late November or early in December.

That's all for this week. Please continue to send in all the news to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, 923-1057 or 622 CJC Highway. Have a Great Week!

Preserving the Playhouse

Grassroots group petitions owner to keep harbor cinema open

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Brian Marshall has watched movies at the Scituate Playhouse for 45 years and he'd like to continue to do so.

After learning last week that the Front Street cinema will close its doors Jan. 1, Marshall, along with his friends Billy Dowd and Janie Tilden, began a grassroots effort to save the neighborhood movie house.

The three had clipboards and petitions in hand Tuesday at the Scituate High School polls to gather signatures from what promised to be record election day turnout. By 10:30 a.m. more than 2,300 residents had cast ballots and Marshall had filled 10 petition pages with their names. In all, the "Save the Movie House Committee" gathered 1,500 signatures and Marshall said he plans to get more. Petitions have been given to several students and are making their way around Scituate schools, Marshall said.

"We don't have to even ask people to sign," said Tilden, who moved to Scituate from England a year and a half ago. "They're coming up to us and asking to sign." Tilden said she enjoys having a dinner and catching a movie at the Playhouse on the weekends with her husband and noted that there's no better way to spend a rainy Saturday with her children then watching a matinee at the cinema.

"We hope to get as many signatures on the petition as we can and appeal to the owner to do all in his power to keep the movie house open," Marshall said.

Marshall is holding onto four decades of movie memories.

"I kissed my first girl in that theater," Marshall said nostalgically. "The first film I saw there was 'Prince Valiant' with Robert Wagner. When I was 11, I saw 'Psycho' there and spent half of the show in the bathroom hiding."

Marshall said countless others regaled him at the polls Tuesday with their own memories of the Playhouse from an elderly woman who recalls watching a silent film at the theater not long after it opened in the 1920s, to another resident who remembers teenage girls rushing the movie screen when Elvis Presley's film 'Love Me Tender' was shown. Rita Stahl said she was at the movies on Dec. 7, 1941. She told Marshall the manager stopped the film and when he announced that the bombing of Pearl Harbor had occurred the young women in the theater with husbands stationed abroad began to scream and cry.

It seems everyone has a Playhouse story to tell.

The hometown cinema is also near and dear to Dowd's heart.

Dowd, who works in the movie business casting actors for director Ridley Scott's films, was Marshall's classmate at Scituate High. Dowd said whenever he's on location in some exotic locale to shoot a film, he's sure to ask "what's playing down at the harbor," when he calls home.

Dowd's had his name up on the Playhouse marquee a few times in recent years. Dowd was a casting director and had a cameo role in "GI Jane" and "Gladiator." He's just back from Florence, Italy where shooting on "Hannibal" — the Silence of the Lambs sequel starring Anthony Hopkins — wrapped up.

Cruising through the Scituate High School parking lot on a moped Tuesday morning Dowd said he's off to start casting a new film in Morocco next week, but wants to help with the effort to keep the movie theater open in whatever way he can. He commended current manager Bret Hardy for the work he's done at the Playhouse since taking over its operation in March.

> "We hope to get as many signatures on the petition as we can and appeal to the owner to do all in his power to keep the movie house open."

> Brian Marshall of the Save the Movie House Committee

Hardy, who owns the company Cinegraph, said it was a lifelong dream to run a movie house. He had grown up working for the Patriot Cinema Corporation whose theatres include the Cameo in Weymouth and the Loring Hall in Hingham. When the Hoyts Cinema Corporation decided not to renew its lease in Scituate, Hardy jumped at the opportunity to take over and make the Playhouse a neighborhood draw again. Hardy lowered prices on movie tickets and concessions, cleaned up the cinema and had looked forward to making more improvements. But his work was cut short when members of the local commission on disabilities told the building's owner, Steven Warner, that the Playhouse had to be made handicapped accessible.

Warner, who's owned the building for about 12 years, said the cost of compliance along with the major renovations needed including overhauling the building's heating, ventilation and air conditioning systems would be too high. Warner, who estimates the current Playhouse building is nearly 60 years old, said the cinema has flooding problems when there are storms because the structure was build below ground grade — another very expensive problem to fix.

"It took us years to come to this decision," Warner said Tuesday. "It doesn't and hasn't paid for itself in a long period of time." And while he's heard from residents that they are upset the theater is closing, many of them have admitted they haven't gone to the movies in Scituate in many years.

Warner said even his own children ask him to drive them to the more modern theatres in Braintree and Randolph where stadium seating, state-of-the-art sound systems and more movie choices are some of the amenities not available in Scituate's cinema.

But Dowd says when he's at home in Scituate and goes to the movies he doesn't miss any of those things.

"You go there for the experience of watching a movie," he said. "There is nothing quite like experiencing a film as it should be experienced — on the screen, in the dark with a soda and popcorn in hand, leaving your cares outside for a few hours as you enjoy a comedy, drama, thriller or romance," Dowd wrote in a letter to the editor this week.

"It's almost the last movie house of its kind," Marshall said. When it closes, residents will have to drive to Braintree or Kingston to see a movie, he said. "That stinks. That breaks my heart."

Marshall also lamented the loss of another recreational outlet for local children.

"Where else can you go and feel safe dropping your kids off for the afternoon," he asked.

Still, all three members of the "Save the Movie House Committee," say they recognize that Warner is the owner and it's ultimately his decision to make.

"All we can do is gather thousands of signatures," Dowd said. "It's entirely up to him."

"We'll have to see how Mr. Warner feels," Marshall added. "He's a very community minded person. Maybe public opinion can change his mind."

History behind 'Taps'

"Taps" is the song that gives us that lump in our throats and usually tears in our eyes. As Veterans Day approaches, you might be interested in learning the history behind the song.

Reportedly, it all began in 1862 during the Civil War, when Union Army Captain Robert Ellicombe was with his men near Harrison's Landing, Va. The Confederate Army was on the other side of the narrow strip of land. During the night, Captain Ellicombe heard the moans of a soldier who was severely wounded on the field. Not knowing if it was a Union or Confederate soldier, the captain decided to risk his life and bring the stricken man back for medical attention.

Crawling on his stomach through the gunfire, the captain reached the stricken soldier and began pulling him toward the encampment. When the captain finally reached his own lines, he discovered it was actually a Confederate soldier, but the soldier was dead. The captain lit a lantern and suddenly caught his breath and went numb with shock. In the dim light he saw the face of the soldier. It was his own son.

The boy had been studying music in the South when the war broke out. Without telling his father, the boy enlisted in the Confederate Army.

The following morning, heartbroken, the father asked permission to give his son a full military burial despite his enemy status.

His request was only partially granted. The captain had asked if he could have a group of Army band members play a funeral dirge for his son at the funeral. The request was denied since the soldier was a Confederate. But, out of respect for the father, they did say they could give him one musician.

The captain chose a bugler. He asked the bugler to play a series of musical notes he had found on a piece of paper in the pocket of the dead youth's uniform. This wish was granted.

The haunting melody, which we now know as "Taps" used at military funerals and memorial services was born:

Day is done
Gone the sun
From the lakes
From the hills
From the sky

All is well,
safely rest.
God is nigh.

Fading light
Dims the sight
And a star
Gems the sky,
Gleaming bright

From afar,
Drawing nigh,
Falls the night.

Thanks and praise,
For our days,
'Neath the sun,
'Neath the stars,
'Neath the sky,

As we go,
This we know,
God is nigh.

From David Dube, training officer for the state Office of Veterans Services.

Hire a teen

The 2001 Cohasset Appalachia Service Project volunteers have redesigned their fund-raising program. All their former Thanksgiving pie and bread customers will need to make other plans for this year. These 60 teenagers are, however, quite willing and eager to help out with fall cleanups and odd jobs. Teen volunteers can be hired for a minimum donation of $10 per hour per volunteer (checks payable to "Cohasset ASP"). They will rake leaves, stack wood, paint, offer computer help, serve a holiday party, make a major dump-run, etc. There are a limited number of volunteers and time available, so first come, first served. They will offer their services as long as there are volunteers available. Contact ASP at 383-0345 or CohassetASP@dreamcom.net or fax request to 383-7005. Visit the web site at CohassetASP.org.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Endorsements

TO THE EDITOR:

Reading your editorial supporting Cantwell and Bradley greatly disappointed me, although, it comes as no surprise. After all, we live in an age where Affirmative Action might best be applied to establishing a quota for conservatives in the media. Still, couldn't you at least come up with a better reason than "He is connected to the Democratic machine and as a member of the majority party, will be able to get things done…?" Since when has being a part of status quo become an attribute for holding public office?

Senator Hedlund has done many things for his constituents in terms of obtaining funding for education, road repairs, water rate relief and assistance with Title 5 compliance. He has consistently opposed wasteful spending of tax dollars such as the out-dated, environmentally damaging diesel restoration on the Greenbush line, which, by the way, Cantwell (a supposed environmentalist) supports.

Ms. McKenna has run a clean race against her opponent, Mr. Bradley. She's raised the customary $30-odd thousand typical for such a race and stands on her principles. Mr. Bradley has raised $150 thousand. Why the disparity? Special interest dollars, of course. A remarkable amount of contributors to Mr. Bradley's campaign have a financial interest in the Mills Mall he supposedly opposes.

At least I agree with the Mariner on one thing — there is a remarkable parallel between these candidates and the presidential race. As you say, the Republican is "clear on who he is…direct and straightforward; the Democrat is "polished and…over-handled by a political machine." Hmmm…fluff or stuff. We know what the media wants.

Sewer costs

TO THE EDITOR:

The Nov. 2 Mariner contained a very long letter written to the Selectmen by the Town's Finance Director. Although the letter was critical of the Sewer Commission's financial tracking of the Central Cohasset Sewer Project, I believe that a detailed rebuttal would be over-complicated and fruitless.

Setting aside the details, the overarching fact is that the Sewer Commission's early-on budget for this project, in 1996 (two years before plans were prepared), was $15 million, and we are now finishing the project in 2000 with only a 4 percent budget overrun. This outstanding performance on a complex project with difficult traffic conditions, indeterminate subsurface conditions, and a first of its kind municipal treatment facility is a feather in the cap of the Town and all those involved in the job. If you need more convincing, just consider the Big Dig's budget escalation from its early-on $2.6 billion estimate to its final $15 billion price tag, a 500 percent overrun.

Finally, the $600,000 borrowing we are asking Town Meeting to authorize has been or will be 100 percent invested in hard project costs and value added to the Town: pumps, piping, utility relocations, and exterior finishes at the plant, all of which are improving the day by day quality of life for all of our townspeople.

Gary Vanderweil
Chairman, Sewer Commission

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter was sent to each of the 112 people who signed the petition sent to selectmen regarding the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation.

As the Executive Director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation I would like to respond to some of the concerns and references made in the letter you signed and sent to the Board of Selectmen regarding the CRC.

The notion that the CRC will "circumvent" the town is unwarranted and completely incorrect. I assure you it is not the planned approach in facilitating the development of infrastructure improvements in the village and harbor. The CRC has extended an open hand to town officials and organizations, asking for their direct involvement in the decision-making process. Although this non-profit corporation is still forming its organization network, a current list of those involved is available at the CRC office, or you may review a description of this network in a Nov. 2, 2000 printing in the Cohasset Mariner. The CRC has also hosted the welcomed input of many residents who have taken the initiative to learn more about the project, and to share their own ideas and concerns. We encourage you to do the same, for the goal of the CRC is to promote an open community dialogue throughout the revitalization process. Also, keep in mind that since much of the recommended improvements will occur on Town of Cohasset property, the Board of Selectmen and Cohasset Town Meeting will have the final decision-making authority on proposals brought forward.

References such as the "agenda and vision for Cohasset is set by the CRC and not by our elected/appointed officials" is a somewhat miss-guided perception. Many residents, town elected/appointed officials, and business owners volunteered their time and energy to the revitalization effort long before Peter Roy and Gerd Ordelheide entered the picture to generously offer their assistance. The visioning and agenda process for this particular effort began in 1996 by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, not by the CRC in 2000. In fact, before 1996 the Village Renaissance Committee did many great things for a number of years to bring similar, yet smaller scale improvements to the village. The agenda and vision is a formidable one, and will continue to evolve and change, as does the community. The town as a whole will set the agenda and vision, not individuals such as myself, you, Peter Roy, or Gerd Ordelheide.

Your statement that new sidewalks, parking, lighting, and other streetscape amenities will benefit only "a very few businessmen" and "narrow commercial interests" is an unfair assessment of the objectives of the program. The village and harbor provide goods and services, as well as sources of recreation for Cohasset residents of all ages. In addition, many family friends and relatives; patrons from neighboring communities; and visitors come to the area to enjoy the natural beauty and character of the town. All will benefit from a more pedestrian friendly, functionally safer, and more aesthetically pleasing environment. It is also true that the entire business community may benefit if more residents and visitors patronize the village and harbor, helping to support our often fragile local economy. However, I do not believe visitors will come in the quantity feared simply because we have safer sidewalks, better parking, and have removed our overhead utility lines.

You are obviously very concerned about the future of the community, and appear to have an interest in protecting the values and quality of life that makes Cohasset your home. I applaud you for your passion, and encourage everyone in the community to be as engaged in this effort, as well as in the many other important town programs that will have impacts on the community. I welcome you to join many of your fellow residents and stop by our office to see the ever-evolving plans and proposals under consideration. I urge you to come in and share your concerns and ideas with me in the hope that we both can learn from the discussion.

For example, your idea of having a town fund created to receive donations that would be administered to assist the revitalization program is a good one. Although the Town may not currently have the administrative resources, nor the time, to presently support such an effort, I will work towards this idea with the Town Manager. The creation of the CRC, a non-profit 501 C3 organization, is presently the best means to accept private donations to implement the program. The funding is needed to hire the expertise essential in fulfilling the planning, design, and engineering requirements to effectively apply for grant funding and permitting approvals. Important community needs such as improving the school facilities, and expanding water and sewer capacity impose a great deal of financial constraints on the Towns' already tight budget. This reality exemplifies the need for private funding to help the town engage in a comprehensive revitalization program. Many generous people throughout the years have always supported various worthy causes and organizations to enhance the community. I believe the revitalization of the village and harbor is one such cause.

Our collective energies should be focused on making positive changes in the community, guided by the need to protect the character and quality of life of the town for future generations to enjoy. I hope you will join the CRC to help the town achieve this end in the effort to improve the village and harbor areas of the community.

Cohasset backs Bush, Kennedy, tax rollback, dog racing ban

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though Cohasset's election results weren't nearly as confusing as Florida's, no general voting pattern could be found when the final numbers were tallied.

Close to 82 percent of Cohasset's 5,464 registered voters turned out at the polls to elect a new president, name representatives and senators to the State House and U.S. capital, fill an assortment of county positions and answer eight ballot questions.

By a slim margin, Cohasset went against the rest of Massachusetts and voted for Texas Gov. George W. Bush as the 43rd President of the United States. Bush eked out a 100-vote win over Vice-President Al Gore, 2,128 to 2,028. Green Party candidate Ralph Nader, whom Democrats blame for holding Gore back nation-wide, garnered 5 percent of the vote with 248 residents supporting him.

But Cohasset went with the state in sending U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Hyannis, back to Washington for a seventh term. Kennedy received 2,730 votes compared to just 754 for Republican challenger Jack E. Robinson. Libertarian candidate Carla Howell had a strong showing collecting 612 votes. In other races, Democrat incumbent U.S. Rep William Delahunt easily beat Republican Erik Bleicken 2,911 to 1,292, and state Sen. Robert Hedlund won a fifth term on Beacon Hill in part of overwhelming support by Cohasset, 2,667 votes compared to Democratic challenger James Cantwell's 1,586 votes.

Interestingly, the race for Clerk of Courts was a dead heat in Cohasset with both Republican Daniel Dewey and Democrat Walter Timilty garnering 1,832 votes. In that race, five write-in votes were recorded.

Cohasset residents favored Question 4, the tax rollback question by a near two-thirds margin. More than 3,000 voters cast a vote in favor of the question that would roll back the state income tax to 5 percent over the next three years, opposed to 1,197 who voted to keep the income tax the same. The town also overwhelmingly supported Question 7, which enhanced the charity donation exemption on the state income tax forms. However, the town did not support providing a tax exemption for tolls collected on the Mass Pike or excise tax fees.

Greyhounds have a lot of friends in Cohasset apparently. Though it didn't pass state-wide, Cohasset residents supported the proposed ban on greyhound racing by the slimmest of margins, 2,175 to 2,154.

"It was very busy yesterday," said Cohasset Town Clerk Marion Douglas of the high turnout. "First thing in the morning we had lines out the door." She said polls got busy again around dinner time, but all had finished when 8 p.m. rolled around. "Everything went pretty smoothly considering how busy it was, everything went very well."

The 82 percent turnout rate was impressive but not as high as the whopping 87 percent that voted in 1992. That election saw George W.'s father lose the presidency to Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton. In that race, Reform Party candidate Ross Perot was credited with stealing key votes away from Bush. In 1996, 80 percent of Cohasset turned out for Clinton's reelection bid against former Kansas Senator Robert Dole.

The recount in Florida may yield more arguments against the nation's Electoral College system of choosing the next president. But Fred Koed, an elector in Massachusetts, thinks it strengthens the need for it.

"If it was decided by the popular vote, we'd probably have to recount all 50 states, which would be astronomical in cost and effort," said Koed, who will travel to the State House in December to officially cast his vote for Gore. "It could allow some backwater places, possibly subject to corruption, have more influence."

As of press time, Gore led barely in the non-binding popular vote with 48,736,028 ballots cast in his favor, compared to Bush's 48,458,634 votes – a difference of 277,394 votes or 0.3 percent. The difference between the two candidates in Florida came down to less than 2,000 votes.

As for the impending Florida decision, Koed said it won't look good for Gore if it comes down to military absentee ballots, which are heavily pro-Bush.

Koed said that if Gore hangs on and takes the electoral vote as well as the popular, the Electoral College will live to see another election. But if now, he expects to see "major dialogue" on the future of the system. "It will be very interesting," he said.

Some things never change

One of the very first things I ever wrote for a newspaper and got paid for was the caption for a picture of a two-headed calf that was born to a "thoroughbred" cow in the Penn's Hill Dairy in East Braintree.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

On my desk in the next mail came my first fan letter.

"You nit wit," it said, or words to that effect. "Don't you know that only a horse can be a thoroughbred? A cow is a purebred."

It was then that I learned, right from the start, that you can never do anything entirely right in this business. No matter how hard you try to avoid them, there's always someone with ballpoint pen at the ready to correct your biases or your mistakes, whether you made them or not.

Apparently, it is the nature of things that all those who do not write for or publish a newspaper, like those who do not manage or own a baseball team, can do a better job than those who do, and this has been going on for some time.

I thought of my "thoroughbred" cow the other day when someone sent me a copy of Boston's Daily Evening Transcript for Wednesday, Nov. 16, 1831, and I learned that, even 169 years ago, readers were taking quill pen in hand and chastising newspapers and their editors for unfairness or mistakes, real or imagined.

Apparently, it is the nature of things that all those who do not write for or publish a newspaper, like those who do not manage or own a baseball team, can do a better job than those who do, and this has been going on for some time.

In fact, the editor, one Lynde Walter, was moved to write this plaintive editorial:

"Next to poverty, delinquent subscribers and duns, to which most editors are subject, the greatest difficulty is to please the public. For so great is the variety of public taste and feeling, that had the conductor of a periodical paper as many heads, as many pens, as his paper has readers, he could never hope to please all; for they cannot please themselves.

"Does he speak out in language plain and simple? It is mere commonplace; the taste of the learned is not gratified; it is fit only for the vulgar.

Does he aspire to elegance; the unlearned cannot understand; and the learned regard him as a pedantic fellow, dabbling in what he has no real pretensions to.

"Does he show his colors and boldly contend for his ground? He is too severe. Does he hide himself beneath a mass of equivocal matter? He is a temporizing hypocrite.

"If he publishes extracts that are better than he can write, he has no talents of his own to display. If he fills his paper with original matter, he might have given something better from the works of others.

"If he attempts to philosophize, it is dull and uninteresting. If he writes on plain and familiar subjects, everybody knew them before.

"Does he attempt to instruct? He needs to be instructed. Does he use his endeavors to amuse? It is light and trifling.

"People are generally fond of being praised, and one might suppose this would satisfy them. But let an editor try that expedient, and he will soon find out his mistake. For such is the power of envy, that no one will thank him for praising him and everyone will hate him for praising others.

"Most people are fond of hearing their neighbors slandered; but if you attempt to point out either the vices or follies of mankind, everyone will find something applicable to himself; and here again you encounter the hatred of the whole mass.

"Every person can tell you how to conduct a paper to please himself, and of course to offend everyone else. These being stubborn facts, there is no alternative, but for an editor to please himself if he can, and hazard the consequences."

"If he does this, he will be certain of satisfying one, which is more than he can say, if he tries to please all."

Bob Hedlund wins big in Cohasset

but the South Shore responded with their votes."

Two of the major issues during the campaign were the Mills mall proposed for the former South Weymouth naval air station and restoration of the Greenbush rail line through Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

"We're sorry that we didn't please the politicians," Hedlund said.

"We stood with the people on those issues."

"We ran on our record," Hedlund said. "We ran a positive campaign. We set out to do this with no endorsements. We proved the pundits wrong.

"Let's celebrate," he said.

Hedlund's father Max said "I'm very proud of my son. Winning is better than losing," he added.

Anna Barrett of Weymouth, Hedlund's grandmother, said, "I'm so happy I can't contain myself."

Hingham was a big win for Hedlund who netted 7,242 votes to Democratic challenger James Cantwell 3,760 votes

Earlier on Election Day, Hedlund and his challenger Cantwell, along with other local candidates, took advantage of voters walking to the three Hingham precincts housed at the former East School off Rte. 228, so they could press the flesh.

"People walk by here and you can shake hands," said Cantwell, who introduced himself to passersby on their way to the polls.

Warm weather and traffic jams along Rte. 228 (East Street) and Collins Street where the polls were located persuaded hundreds of voters to park wherever they could and make the short walk to the school.

Hedlund, who arrived after a visit to Hull, said he was cautiously optimistic about his chances of winning another term.

"My candidate's election day sixth sense feels good and I've been right most of the time," he said. The Hingham native said he was getting the thumbs up from many voters as they passed him.

Cantwell said he was spending a fair amount of time Tuesday in Hingham where he could talk to voters directly about Greenbush and the Mills Mall.

"Hingham has been a difficult town for me," he conceded..

The mood was upbeat. Cantwell and Hedlund chatted briefly. And Hedlund exchanged a few friendly jabs with Democrat Garrett Bradley, a candidate for Mary Jeanette Murray's Third Plymouth District state representative seat.

As a press photographer approached, Hedlund said he spotted Bradley primping behind his SUV. Bradley quickly responded that Hedlund was more photogenic.

Election officials asked Cantwell earlier to move the minimum 150 feet away from the polls. Cantwell thought he could stand near the entrance to greet voters as long as he didn't wear any campaign buttons. But the Secretary of State's office, contacted by Hingham officials, said otherwise. Cantwell agreeably moved the required distance and put his campaign button back on.

Hedlund also carried Scituate 5,549 to 4,502. Cantwell won Marshfield 7,317 to Hedlund's 4,674 (more results in chart).

At 10:15 p.m. applause greeted Cantwell as he entered the Weymouth Elks Hall with his wife Jennifer.

He was introduced by Councilor at Large Joseph Connolly.

"This was a heavyweight fight and we went 15 rounds," Connolly said.

"We put the contender back on his heels. He still doesn't believe that he won. We'll get him again. It's only two years. We will get him again."

Connolly pointed out that Cantwell carried four of the eight towns in the senatorial district.

Cantwell told his supporters that he received 47 percent of the vote to 51 percent for Hedlund.

"We won Weymouth, Marshfield, Braintree and Hull," Cantwell said.

"I want to thank each of you here. We can never repay your great friendship."

Cantwell said he was proud to have received endorsements from 35 selectmen and former selectmen.

"We know we've made such a difference on the South Shore," he said.

"I want you to know it's not over. Much more work needs to be done about all of the things you care about: true health care reform, real transportation improvement, and real education reform. To do nothing is not an option. The fight is not over. We look forward to another day."

Weymouth Mayor David Madden said, "I'm extremely proud of the way this party has run this election. I think we have a lot to be proud of in terms of the candidates we put forward both in the primary and the final election."

Rep. Paul Haley said to Cantwell, "I'm very proud to stand here with you. You ran an outstanding campaign. We're all disappointed that it didn't turn out the way we thought it would, but you can be proud of your campaign. You stuck to the issues."

Mary Ford also contributed to this report.

Bradley takes state rep seat

concede to Bradley, which set off a flurry of activity and excitement in the hall. Final Hull numbers were posted shortly after and as the cheering crested, Bradley emerged from his upstairs campaign office with wife, Heather, and daughter, Amanda.

"What a night! What a campaign!" Bradley said to his throng of supporters. He said he hopes to follow in the footsteps of outgoing state Rep. Murray and asked for the district's "patience" as he makes the transition from Bradley the candidate, to Bradley the state representative. "I'm excited about the prospects of what tomorrow will bring and I'm very happy for all the support we've received," he said.

"We're feeling good, we're happy with the result," Bradley said afterward. "I really didn't know what was going on [in terms of the results]. There was a high turnout all over and we saw a lot of familiar faces."

He said he got Cohasset's results first and said he was surprised by how well he did there. "I felt if that was reflective across the district, we were going to have a good night."

As for the immediate future, Bradley said he will be taking a well-deserved vacation to Florida with his family and once back, will begin preparing for his career change.

By 10:30 p.m., most of McKenna's supporters had made their way over to cheer Republican state Sen. Bob Hedlund's victory in his race against Democrat James Cantwell.

"I'm not disappointed," said McKenna. "I'm actually thrilled with the numbers in light of the fact I just started campaigning eight months ago and was working with a quarter the money my opponent had."

Though her first venture into the local political scene resulted in disappointing results, McKenna said don't count her out in 2002. "All I know is, Garrett Bradley had better stay on his toes, because I'm going to be running right on his heels."

McKenna added that the campaign has been the best experience of her life and said she planned on sitting her daughter, Maeve, down and explain that though she lost, there is a value in just running and getting to meet all the "wonderful people" she has encountered on the campaign trail. "The most important thing is that she learns from her mother to always shoot for the stars, no matter what the opposition is," she said adding, "I'll be back."

Rep. Murray, who beat Bradley in 1998 to retain her seat, thought McKenna did very well for her first foray into the political ring. She remained critical of Bradley's massive political war chest that topped $100,000 for the second campaign in a row. "I find it a waste on money," she said adding she never spent more than $25,000 until her campaign against Bradley. She hoped Bradley will donate whatever is left to various town charities and organizations.

A surprise guest to the Bradley party was former Hingham and Hull representative Caroline Stouffer, who Garrett said was the last Democrat to represent the district in 24 years, when state-wide redistricting went into effect, eliminating Stouffer's seat.

"[Bradley's] been an excellent candidate," she said. "He's young, energetic and will be a dynamic representative of this district.

Surging soccer team wins first three tourney matches

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Forget records. Forget seeding.

It appears the best formula for success in the tourney may simply be surviving the South Shore League with a .500 or better record.

Twenty-one teams started out in the Division 3 Southeast Sectionals a week ago. Six remain. Four of them — Cohasset, Norwell, Hanover and Carver — are SSL teams. The fifth SSL team to qualify for the tourney, Norton (18th seeded with an 8-8-2 record), lost in a 2-1 second round overtime thriller to number 2 seed Medway (15-2-1).

"There's no doubt that playing against teams like Norwell and Hanover and Carver get you ready for these games," observed Skipper first-year head coach Dave Nigro. "There's a high quality of soccer played in this league."

The Skippers (10-6, number 13 seed) have won three games in the tourney to advance to the quarterfinals (Friday at Plymouth North High School versus the winner of Wednesday's Medfield- Norwell game). Cohasset got the better of 20th seed Bishop Stang (7-8-1) on Friday by a 4-2 score, and then number 4 seed Westport (14-1-4) in a thrilling double overtime victory on Sunday. The third tourney win for the Skippers, and their 10th in a row overall, came Tuesday night in Nantucket with a 7-1 walkover of the host Whalers (10-5-2 and a number12 seed).

The Skippers left Cohasset High at 9 a.m. Tuesday in order to arrive at the island in plenty of time for the 2:30 game. They arrived home at approximately 9:30 p.m..

"I joked with the boys that if we got there with no problems, the game would be easy," confided Nigro, alluding to the tails of travel woe most teams that have played Nantucket or Martha's Vineyard regularly seem to have. "I didn't figure it would go this well though."

The trip did indeed go relatively smoothly, which turned out to be a harbinger of things to come. Cohasset wasted little time jumping on their hosts. With the Skippers controlling the ball deep in Nantucket territory early on, sophomore Greg O'Connell was able to work himself into position for an 18-yard tally from straight out just minutes into the game. Captain Doug O'Brien made it 2-0 on a similar goal before the five minute mark.

The Skippers continued to maintain a pretty strong territorial advantage for the remainder of the half. That cause was aided considerably by their well tuned ball control game and the steady wind at their backs that made it virtually impossible for the Nantucket team to make any long clears.

Still, Nantucket did nice job inside its goal box for most of the Skippers add to former league powerhouse's season of woe with 16-7 win

By David Ingber

Last Friday, the surging Cohasset Skippers won their first South Shore League game of the year over the struggling Clippers of Norwell, 16-7.

"That was the best game I have coached in three years here," reported Cohasset head coach Tony Rolfe. "And the first half was the best half ever."

Cohasset quarterback Jason Brown provided most of the offense in the Skippers 16-7 exorcising win over perennial league powerhouse Norwell with a pair of long touchdown runs and a game high 143 yards.

Cohasset's defense, which has held opposing offenses to one or fewer touchdowns in five of its eight games, shut out the Clippers in the first half.

Sophomore Cosimo Cambi, who led the Skippers with nine tackles, tackled Norwell quarterback John McKenzie in the end zone for a safety to put the game out of reach with under four minutes left in the game.

"That took the pressure off," noted Rolfe. "It was the nail in the coffin."

Senior Ronan Buick was next with seven tackles, while junior Nick Bolster picked off McKenzie twice for his fourth and fifth interceptions of the year.

"It was hard to pick out just one player," said Cohasset's third year head coach. "It was really a team effort."

Cohasset got the ball rolling early, as they drove 70 yards to begin the game, the final 38 coming on junior quarterback Jason Brown's 38 yard touchdown scramble.

Brown scored again in the second quarter on an electrifying 72 yard run. Chris Golden's second straight extra point made it 14-0. Brown ran for a game high 143 yards, with two touchdowns and an average of 23.8 yards per carry.

"I think that was his best game," appraised Rolfe of the second year quarterback.

Senior captain running back Brian Krupczak rushed for 103 yards on 25 carries. The Brown-Krupczak ground attack, along with Brown's passes, had the Clipper defense guessing all night.

"He runs so hard, he is a big-time back," effused Rolfe. "When you play the pass, you can't defend our options."

Senior running back Mike Mohan guided the Clippers on offense with 104 yards on 27 carries, in addition to scoring his sixth touchdown of the year, a 35 yard scamper. He also led Norwell on the defensive end with eight tackles and one interception.

Mohan is still coming off a knee injury, but seemed to be up to speed in this game.

"He played a really good game. He looked better against us, than he did last week," praised Rolfe of Mohan's improving condition.

Cohasset's record now stands at 5-3, yet they are only 1-3 in South Shore League games. The Clippers slipped to 3-6, and are 0-5 in League play.

The Skippers finish their season with two divisional opponents in Hanover and Hull. As of now, the league appears to be a toss up, especially after Abington's 40-0 win over Hanover and Hull's upset of

Lady Skippers team goes down fighting

Terrific season comes to a close for field hockey team

"We wanted to show (late Cohasset Athletic Director) Clark (Chatterton) that we could be the best we could be. Yeah, we lost to Martha's Vineyard, but we fought hard."

Cohasset field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick

It was a great run.

The Lady Skippers quest for the state title was stopped by a 4-0 loss, on Monday, to the shockingly strong seventh seeded Martha's Vineyard.

The Cohasset field hockey team wrapped up their remarkable season with a n outstanding record of 15-2-2.

"They did not have a weak link," Skippers coach Debbie Bostwick appraised of the Vineyard squad. "It just was not meant to be."

In this game, the quarterfinal match, the Vineyarders kept the ball in the attacking end nearly the entire game, and did not even allow a shot on net.

Martha's Vineyard was led by senior Lian Dixon, a forward who scored two second half goals, and who has many division one colleges scouting her.

"Her stick handling was unbelievable," praised sophomore forward Heather Peraino.

rest of the half. Then, with just under 10 minutes remaining before the break, Cohasset scored again, and the floodgates seemed to open. The Skippers would add two more before the clock hit "0:00" for the half, transforming this semi-final showdown into a laugher.

O'Connell would add two more scores for the hat trick. O'Brien also added a second tally, while Tim Baird and captain Eric Shea chipped in with solo goals.

"The kids are just really paying great right now," said Nigro of his team that won its final seven regular season games before these three in the tourney. "It just seems to be coming together for them."

This win was certainly a welcome exercise coming on the heels of Sunday's cardiac abusing double overtime victory in Westport. Matt Bilodeau scored both goals for Cohasset in this physical battle played under miserably raw conditions (most games were cancelled on Sunday due to rain).

Nigro deserves at least as much credit as Bilodeau for this win, as it was he who devised the counter that made it possible for the Skippers to turn Westport's own strategy against them for the game winner. All game long on set kicks deep in their own end, the Wildcats had been building a wall and then charging in unison as Cohasset's designated kicker approached the ball, then leaping and twisting away on the kick.

It was the first-year coach who came up with the idea of keeping the ball on the ground and driving it under the charging wall. The tactic worked as designed early in the second OT when Shea sent a worm burner from 25-yards out under the airborne feet to a wide open Bilodeau eight yards from the net for the easy chip in.

The Skippers trailed for the only time in the tournament when Anthony Gladu managed to put Bishop Stang on the board 28 minutes into Friday's first round game, taking advantage of the slip of a Cohasset defender on the rain slickened field to walk in unmolested and drill a shot past helpless keeper Nick Pestone.

The Skippers struck back eight minutes before the break to tie the game at 1-1 when the rebound of a free kick from Shea was tipped in by O'Connell.

Ten minutes into the second half, the Skippers seized their first lead of the game when junior Dan Kinchla scored off an assist from Baird.

Kinchla and freshman Chris Clarke then scored just 45 seconds apart near the midpoint of the half to put the game out of reach.

Pestone recorded 16 saves for the Skippers, nine coming in the second half, as the desperate Spartan forwards threw everything they could muster at the senior keeper.

SSL swaps Hanover for Mashpee, Harwich

Pilgrim Conference re-alignment affects seven schools

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Pilgrim Conference officials approved seven changes at their realignment hearing last Wednesday, including the addition of Harwich, raising the number of schools in the conference to 33.

There are five leagues within the Pilgrim Conference. The Big Three League contains the three largest schools in the conference in Brockton, Durfee and New Bedford. These three schools were not even asked to vote at the hearing, as changes to this league's alignment were not a consideration.

The next biggest league within the Pilgrim Conference is the Old Colony League, followed by the Atlantic Coast League, Patriot League and South Shore League.

The conference realigns every four years based on total enrollment in grades 9-12 as of Oct. 1 of that year. All changes approved at last Wednesday's hearing will take place in Sept., 2001.

Harwich High School, currently an independent in interscholastic athletic competition with a student body of 610, will join Norton as the largest school in the South Shore League. Mashpee High (enrollment of 536), which has seen a steady decline in enrollment numbers, will move down from the Patriot League to the SSL.

Hanover (711) has gone the opposite way with enrollment, and thus will move up from the SSL to the Patriot League.

Duxbury (891) will also join the Patriot League, moving down from the Atlantic Coast League.

Many AD's feel that the Patriot League will be the toughest top to bottom in the conference, with the addition of these two perennial contenders in many of the team sports.

"I think there will be some real good games every day of every week," offered Hanover High Athletic Director John Sullivan. "The competition is going to be extremely good, but we're looking forward to the challenges."

Hanover was one of the original members of the SSL, meaning a lot of long standing rivalries will be lost, or at least diminished somewhat.

"We'll continue to play some of those old rivals, like Norwell, as non-league games," said Sullivan. "Hopefully, that's a rivalry that can stay strong, and we hope to renew a few old league rivalries too (with teams in the Patriot League who were once in the same league with Hanover)."

The ACL will also lose Marshfield (1,251), which goes from being the biggest school in the ACL to the smallest in the Old Colony League.

"We have good sports programs here, so I feel pretty good about our chances of remaining competitive," said Marshfield Athletic Director Glenn Ward. "We're trying to look at the big picture right now, and not how this might affect one or two programs.

"We'll be going from a seven team league to an eight team league, so we pick up an extra two league games right there, and there will probably be more team sports available in the bigger schools."

In place of Duxbury and Marshfield, the ACL will get Quincy (1,239) moving down from the OCL and Randolph (1040), moving up from the Patriot League.

For Randolph, the move will be an expensive one. The Blue Devils will need to add approximately $16,000 to their travel budget next year, according to Athletic Director Bill Gould, with regular league match-ups against Sandwich, Dennis-Yarmouth and Nauset Regional, at the far eastern edge of the cape in Orleans.

There was some talk before the meeting that some of the schools realignment might petition that decision with the MIAA. However, according to East Bridgewater Athletic Director Al Smith, President of the Pilgrim Conference's Athletic Directors Committee, it appears now that all the school heads are willing to abide by the dictates put forth in the conference's constitution that enrollment will determine alignment.

"I honestly think that everyone agreed that we need to stick to the constitution's guidelines," reported Smith. "This is the fairest way we have of maintaining competitive balance."

Carver.

Carver and Norton are both tied right now with records of 7-1, (4-1 in the SSL), with Hull right behind at 6-2, 3-1.

Game Notes

-Only one penalty was called the entire game on either team, and it was declined.

-Between Cohasset and Norwell, 32 players at least assisted on a tackle.

-After the safety, Norwell kicked off. Funny, but I thought they were supposed to punt.

-Cohasset made two trips into the Red Zone in the first half that ended in turnovers, a fumble and turnover on downs.

-Cohasset did not punt the entire first half, while the Clippers did so only once.

The Cohasset football team celebrates the end of Norwell's domination over them. The Skippers beat Norwell Friday night, 16-7.

-Cohasset began their drives at an average of the their own 42 yard line. Norwell? Their own 23.

-Norwell had only three players with three or more tackles while the Skippers had nine.

"She was incredible," added Bostwick, voted South Shore League Coach of the Year.

As time expired on the game, as well as the season, the eleven seniors received a standing ovation for the terrific year they had. Most of the home crowd even lingered after the game to personally congratulate the team.

"I have to give credit to the fans for making my team feel good," lauded Bostwick.

Though many of the seniors, as well as juniors and sophomores, were in tears by the time the final whistle blew, the end of this season could hardly be denoted anything less than a success.

"If this were the championship game, and we had won, we'd be crying too," joked the 12th year coach.

Prior to this game, Cohasset defeated Carver in an overtime thriller, 3-2, at home last Thursday.

Carver's sophomore sensation Kristin Stemple, third in the league this past season in scoring, got the Crusaders off to a quick start with a first half goal.

But in the second half, Bostwick opted to go to her "Flying V" offense, which proved effective as senior All-Star captain Andi Shaughnessy, second in the league in scoring, tied the game off a rebound.

Senior fullback Morgan Hurley scored to give Cohasset the lead five minutes later off senior Kelly Lordan's assist, but Brandi Citaldo of Carver tied the game again with two minutes left to force the game into sudden death overtime.

"It was really intense, because one mistake and it's over," said Hurley.

But Cohasset did not make any mistakes in the overtime period, as Peraino scored three minutes in on sophomore Deanna Brown's assist, which was immediately followed by a team hug, tears of joy, and hometown fans rushing the field.

"It was the best feeling I have ever had in my life," bubbled Peraino. "But if I did not get [the goal], I know one of my teammates would have. It was just a question of who and when."

Senior All-Star goalie Krysten Considine stopped nine shots in the win over Carver, and she also recorded 14 saves against Martha's Vineyard.

This has been a season of memories for the Cohasset field hockey program, highlighted by the tie of undefeated Hanover, the strong second place finish in the South Shore League, a number two seed in the state tournament, and the placement of five seniors on the South Shore League All-Star team.

"This is one of my most memorable years," said Bostwick, who rated this season on a par with the 1989 campaign in which she first led Cohasset into the state tourney. "We have earned some real bragging rights."

Though there was some talk of Bostwick retiring from her coaching job, her spirited players managed to convince her otherwise.

"You can't get rid of me yet," she declared. "I'm not done yet."

This season was dedicated to the beloved athletic director Clark Chatterton, who lost his battle with cancer over the summer, giving the players a driving force behind the season.

"We wanted to show Clark that we could be the best we could be," said Bostwick. "Yeah, we lost to Martha's Vineyard, but we fought hard."

New associate minister settles into Cohasset congregation

Will preach on Sunday

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Could Valhalla, the Old Norse mythological hall of the fallen warrior, be coming to Cohasset Common?

It probably won't physically come to town, but maybe it will through stories told by the new associate minister at Second Congregational Church, Max Olmsted.

Olmsted, now enrolled in Boston University's School of Theology, recently left a position at the University of Colorado, where he taught Scandinavian language and literature, to follow a calling with the church.

"I had a growing feeling of discontent [with teaching] which is the opposite feeling that you should be getting. There was just a number of aspects I didn't like," Olmsted said of his decision.

After teaching for close to four years in the Rockies, Olmsted said he literally had "an epiphany."

"I was listening to a minister speak of the Great Commandment [one of the Bible's 10 Commandments] and he asked, 'What is your God?'" explained Olmsted, a Massachusetts native raised in the Congregational church. "And I realized that my profession was [my God]. I was spending all my time on my profession."

That was in December of 1999. In May, with his acceptance letter to BU in his hand, he left the collegiate teaching experience and "came back home."

Olmsted refused to say he would never go back to teaching — one could argue that teaching is a religious person's biggest role — but he said, for right now, this is where he wants to be.

"The important thing I'm finding out as I'm beginning to take these religious journeys, is that I shall never say never. Just go with what comes next," he said.

Olmsted, 37, sat in his makeshift office in the second-grade classroom at Second Congregational looking very much like a college professor/theology student. Wearing jeans, a striped collared shirt, tie, and sport jacket, the sandy-haired Olmsted explained how he got to the present by going through the past.

As a kid he wanted to be three things: a professor, a minister and a deep-water sailor. He interned with a minister as part of a high-school program, and his dreams of being a sailor were frowned upon by his mother, afraid of losing her only son. The professorial branch of the triad came after receiving a degree from Umass-Amherst and spending time as a graduate student in Lund, Sweden.

He came back to UCal-Berkeley where he received his doctorate in Scandinavian and Old Norse. While writing dissertations in Iceland, he heard of a teaching position opening in Colorado. But he tired of the collegiate life, and decided to take the chance of switching careers.

Three days a week, Olmsted can be found around Commonwealth Avenue in Boston, once again attending classes. From Friday to Monday, however, he makes the trip from his Brookline home to Cohasset, and gains what can be called hands-on education as associate minister to the Rev. Gary Ritts.

"We've for about 10 years been in the planning process of bringing someone else on board," said Ritts. "Two and a half years ago we brought aboard a student intern [Robin Long] and she did such a great job, we thought we'd move to the next step and expand the position to an associate."

Olmsted appeared almost out of the blue for the Cohasset congregation. He actually preached before the Cohasset church earlier this fall as a "neutral site interview" for a position in Rockland. However, members of the Cohasset congregation – which are the ones responsible for the hirings, firings and religious direction of the church, hence the name Congregationalism – approached Ritts about hiring Olmsted.

"It was by hand of God," Olmsted said with a big laugh.

Ritts said the church checked around for the proper procedure and "went ahead and made our own approach, and he came our way."

Olmsted said his duties will include sitting on the church's various committees, creating a fellowship program in the new year, organizing ecumenical services with the neighboring churches, leading adult Christian education and bible group studies, establishing alternative services to the Sunday morning ones, and doing pastoral outreach work to the church's parishioners and the community in general. He also will help Ritts with the service, though what he can do is still limited by church law. He has to obtain a license from the United Church of Christ, the organizing body for the country's Congregationalist churches to perform the sacraments, which in the Congregationalist church are baptism and communion.

He will preach for the first time as associate minister this Sunday.

Ritts said so far, Olmsted's time has been a pleasant experience. "I've enjoyed working with him," he said.

For Olmsted, public opinion of his performance is crucial, as the congregation's sentiment is the crucial measuring stick of how long he remains at Second Congregational.

"They need to get a match," said Olmsted about the church's process of choosing a minister, "not just the best degree."

Olmsted argued that a parish has to be comfortable with the minister and the minister has to be comfortable with the parish, and so far he is encouraged. "That's just what seemed to happen here."

Thanks for support

TO THE EDITOR:

The Osgood PSO representatives would like to thank the following people for participating in Make A Difference Day:

Pam, Scott and Chris Wilson; Lisa Dunne; Allison Moskow; Jean Livingstone; Barbara and Taylor Golz; MaryKay and Sam Richardson; Tom McQuade; Phil Tedeschi; Diane, Kiki and Max Shipp; Isabella Flibotte; Ronnie, Margaret and Tara Goodwin; Jim and Ian Porter; Mary Whitley and Caroline Collins; Joyce and Dean Driscoll; Janeen and EJ Culhane; Andrew Whitney; and Marilee Cantelmo.

A special thank you to Ian and Nathan Porter for donating their basketball hoop to the school. Thank you also to Atlantic Bagel, Joseph's Hardware and the Village Greenery for their generous discounts.

Together, we placed safety mats below the slides and raked the mulch on the playground; painted hopscotch games from around the world on the hardtop; stained the picnic tables; and planted three shrubs and 100 daffodil bulbs. Thank you for making a difference!

CHS hockey

TO THE EDITOR:

Each year the Cohasset Varsity Hockey program gets stronger. With your generous support the Cohasset Hockey Boosters have been able to update uniforms, arrange for several clinics, provide jackets and hats for the players and coaches, insure rosters at every game and give each graduating senior a keepsake watch. We have helped fund the work-out center at the high school, and given charitable donations. Last year we reinstated the Annual Alumni Hockey Game on New Year's Day.

This year, our major fund-raiser will be a calendar raffle. At Stop & Shop and Shaw's Market this weekend, Nov. 11 and 12, members of the Cohasset Varsity Hockey team will be selling tickets and providing a calendar of December showing the fabulous prizes to be won on each day. Christmas and New Year's Day are $100 bonus days. There are 31 chances to win with each ticket. After each drawing the winning ticket will go back in the hat making it possible to win again. Each ticket will sell for $5. Prizes range in value from $25 to $100. The following businesses have very generously donated goods and services:

Aveni Cleaners, Bernard's Restaurant , Buttonwood Books and Toys, Cohasset Collision Center, Cohasset Greenery, Cohasset House of Pizza, Cohasset Jewelers, Cohasset Plaza Cleaners, Cohasset Sunoco, Dependable Cleaners, Dunkin Donuts, Exotic Flowers, Fitness First, Fleet Bank, French Memories Bakery, Good Sport, Jake's Seafood Restaurant, Joseph's Hardware, King Jewelers, Leo's Exxon, Maggie's Corner Bakery, MVP Sports, Newport Creamery, Noble's Camera Shop, Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, Ports and Company, RGP, Rudolph Adamo Hair Salon, Shaw's Supermarket, Shoe Market, Silver Spoon Café, South Shore Music Circus, Sports Authority, Stop & Shop, Strecker Eye Care, Village Greenery.

Support Cohasset Hockey. Purchase your raffle tickets from the hockey players over the weekends.

TO THE EDITOR:

Subj.: Article 3 in the Warrant for the November 13, 2000 Special Town Meeting

As most Cohasset residents are aware, the Town has been in discussion with the MBTA about the impacts that the reconstruction on the Greenbush rail line will have on our town and the mitigation of those impacts. One of the issues outstanding is the acquisition of the rail right of way from the Town.

By way of background, in 1982 Cohasset purchased the railroad right of way from the Pen Central bankruptcy for $132,000, as approved by Town Meeting. Today, portions of that old rail line are used by citizens as a walkway, an informal recreational area and as a green space.

In order to reconstruct the rail line the MBTA needs to acquire this land from Cohasset. The Town feels that the land has a definite value, ranging somewhere between the original $132,000, as adjusted for inflation, and the valuation it might have to all the abutters if it were added to their property. This upper value is in excess of $2 million. (At this current time the Town is in the process of seeking an outside professional appraisal of this property as a guide to establish its value.)

Ironically, the MBTA feels that they have the option of taking the land with no compensation to Cohasset. Cohasset Town Counsel feels that there are reasons this may not be the case. Article 3 which proposes to convert the land to "Park Land" is a way of bringing the Massachusetts legislature to bear to help us in our quest to obtain a fair market value for our property. In order for the MBTA to "take" land designated as Park Land, a 2/3 affirmative vote of both houses of the Massachusetts legislature is required. This is not a requirement for the MBTA to take other types of land. Thus, we are creating leverage through the legislature to garner the attention of the MBTA so that we can negotiate a fair market value for our property.

Whether you are for or against the train is not the issue. The issue is whether our Town is due just compensation when land it rightfully purchased is taken for a public works project. Please attend the Nov. 13 Special Town Meeting and vote for Article #3.

Harbor Walk

TO THE EDITOR:

At the recent seminar in Bancroft Hall to obtain citizen input for the proposed Harbor Walk, someone asked if there was any clamor for the project.

No, nor was there much clamor for any of the town's features we now take for granted and enjoy, such as the Sailing Club or the Village Pump project. Usually it is only a few good people that initially have the vision and who set to work to accomplish something for the town. After it has been accomplished we tend to take it for granted, and to think of it as always having been there. No one remembers being opposed or unhelpful.

Someone snidely remarked that much of the proposed Harbor Walk would be on land owned by Mr. Roy. Why is it a bad thing to allow some of one's real estate to be put to a public use?.

The meeting was reasonably civil, and thankfully there was no juvenile braying about "corporate colors."

Just imagine that this was the closest you ever got to a home-cooked Thanksgiving dinner

This Thanksgiving, the reality is that more than 38% of those who will go hungry are children. That's why the Greater Boston Food Bank has teamed up with area manufacturers and Stop & Shop to raise more than $1,000,000 for local America's Second Harvest food banks.

Each time you visit Stop & Shop this holiday season, you'll have the chance to make a donation to the Thanks for Giving Program and help feed thousands of hungry men, women and children. It's a simple but powerful way you can share the joy of this holiday with those less fortunate.

St. Anthony's hosts men's clothing drive

A clothing drive will be held at St. Anthony parish this coming weekend of Nov. 12. The drive will be conducted for men's fall/winter clothing to be distributed to the homeless and poor adults at Saint Francis shelter in Boston. Saint Frances house is a nonprofit, non-sectarian comprehensive shelter with rehabilitative programs for homeless men and woman, age 18 and over. Currently the shelter has no need for woman or children's clothing.

The following is a list of items that are needed:

- Men's jeans and casual pants
- Men's fall and winter coats and jackets
- Men's casual long sleeve winter shirts
- Men's sweatshirts and sweaters
- Men's white and blue dress shirts and black or gray dress pants for job interviews
- Men's dress shoes
- Men's belts
- Men's winter hats, gloves, and scarves
- Men's (new) white tube socks, T-shirts and underwear
- Men's long underwear
- Any men's clothing size XXL or above
- Toiletry products (unopened) – deodorant, shampoo, toothbrushes and combs

The clothing can be dropped off at St. Anthony Parish center on Saturday Nov. 11 (4-7pm) or Sunday Nov. 12 (7:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.).

Please do not drop off any clothing at any of the parish facilities until the Saturday or Sunday. If you have any questions please call Paul Rooney on 383-6363.

Harbor walk plan meets with resistance

Village workshop tonight at Town Hall

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Designs of a wooden boardwalk cantilevered over Cohasset Harbor may have gone by the wayside.

According to many in attendance at last week's Harbor Walk community meeting, sponsored by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, the general feeling was that if anything is done to the harbor area, it's going to be small.

The meeting, held at the Lightkeepers Residence in Cohasset, attracted upwards of 70 people to a presentation by the Cecil Group, a Boston-based urban engineering firm, followed by a public comment period.

Though all parties involved said the comments were generally constructive, opinion differed as how popular opinion viewed the proposal. Some even questioned whether the creation of a harbor walk would be recreating the wheel.

"The harbor walk's already there," said North Main Street resident Noel Ripley. "The historical commission did it 10 years ago." Ripley was referring to the "Captain's Walk" around the harbor, a 'self-conducting walking tour' that features 10 stations spread out along the waterfront telling what the area was like 100 years ago.

"I think it's better to say an enhancement of the existing Captain's Walk," he said of the CRC's proposal. "Frances Hagerty once said, 'Why can't we love the harbor area like we love the town common'. We certainly can do more to appreciate it."

Ripley suggested installing old photographs around the harbor to give a visual depiction of the area in times past.

Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, said the purpose of the workshop was to get a feeling of where people stood on changes to the harbor area. "The goal was to engage the community on their thoughts of what they think should be done to improve the area, or if nothing should be done at all," he said. Rizzo thought a couple of themes arose from the meeting, such as lack of access to the water, and safety while walking along Border and Margin Streets. He said he also got the feeling that people were concerned the project would become "ostentatious" and not fit in with the general feeling of small-town Cohasset. "The general overall sense of the people was that they didn't shoot down the idea, and that most people were open to the notion," Rizzo said. "They felt it would be nice to have some improvements as long as they're done in a specific way."

Black Horse Lane resident Bob Davenport agreed that it was a constructive meeting, but said he didn't think a formal boardwalk interested anyone. "The general tone indicated virtually no one in the room was in favor. The only thing people seemed to be in favor of was in regard to a public sidewalk," he said.

Right now, said Davenport, the existing sidewalk on Border Street slopes toward the street and doesn't feature any sort of formal curbing. As a result, cars tend to park up on the curb taking up walking room for pedestrians.

However, according to both Davenport and Ripley, by installing formal curbing along Border Street, cars would be forced to park farther in the street, narrowing the available space in the road.

Larry Hansen, a Margin Street resident, said he wouldn't mind seeing some improvements to the harbor area, as long as they aren't frivolous. "I don't see that there's a need to create an attractive environment to draw all kinds of tourists," he said, adding, "I think the harbor could certainly be improved but it needs to make sense. I personally don't want to see the town spend a lot for money for silly things."

Specifically, Hansen is interested in installing a fence or railing around the harbor and adding a few benches to sit and enjoy the view. But whatever is done, he said, should be done with the interests of Cohasset residents put first. "It should very much be for the Cohasset homeowner rather than a few businesses that might benefit from some sort of improvements."

CRC's primary backers are Gerd Ordelehiede and Peter Roy. Ordelheide owns the recently renovated and expanded Red Lion Inn and Lilac House and Roy owns Kimball's Hotel, Atlantica and Olde Salt House restaurants, and the Mill River Railway property, all along the water front.

Some have accused Ordelheide and Roy of proposing improvements to the harbor and village areas solely for personal business gain.

Hansen isn't one of those people however.

"I do appreciate the leadership role Roy and Ordeleheide have taken, in trying to move things forward," he said. "I don't think it's up to selectmen to provide leadership, it's up to the board to administer. Roy and Gerd want to show some leadership and that's fine."

However, Hansen said the recent joint purchase by the town and the CRC of six trash barrels, costing a total of $4,200 is an example of what he doesn't want for the harbor. "They look nice, but I wouldn't want to pay a dime," he said. "They're too extravagant."

A large contingent from the Cohasset Sailing Club attended the forum, concerned with the proposed walk crossing in front of the club's Government Island location.

"There is a lot of activity out there [in front of the club, by the waterfront] and it would be a huge liability and safety issue for us," said sailing club board member Ann Musto.

Speaking as a town resident, she was concerned with the cost the project could reach (upwards of $7 million) and also what the walk would do to further constrict access to the harbor.

"There would be virtually no public access, except from Government Island. If there's no street parking, you can't go there unless you live there or are a patron of Kimball's or Atlantica," she said.

Harbor area improvements are just one aspect of the CRC's redevelopment plans for Cohasset. A community workshop regarding the village area is scheduled to be held tonight at 7:30 at Cohasset Town Hall.

Sandy Beach access

Despite protests by the Sandy Beach Association, selectmen decided to keep the beach parking lot's northern end open for exiting cars on a test basis next summer.

This past summer, selectmen voted to open the northern end after residents expressed safety concerns about exiting the parking lot. Growing sand dunes and its grasses impede the vision of motorists pulling out of the parking lot. Selectmen said cutting back the dunes would require conservation commission approval, so the best solution was to open the northern end for exit only.

The decision sparked protest from the Sandy Beach Association. In a letter sent to selectmen, association president Robin Lawrence decried not only the move, but the fact the group, which owns and oversees the beach itself, was not consulted before a decision was made.

At last week's selectmen's meeting, Lawrence said the open northern end would give access to cars without beach stickers.

"We have some 14 and 15 year olds that check stickers as cars come into lot, and police make occasional runs through ticketing," he told selectmen, "and they do a decent job."

But Lawrence added that it would be impossible to staff the northern end of the lot to make sure cars only exit from that end. The result would be "many unauthorized visitors once word gets out you don't need a sticker out at Sandy Beach."

Lawrence suggested either using the existing center dune at the entrance as a "natural roundabout," trimming the dune grass, or installing a parabolic mirror for cars pulling out to use.

"I am very reticent to start messing with the dunes," said Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan, a former conservation commission chairman. "Every time we do, someone gets carried away and ruins them."

Selectmen Merle Brown strongly urged Lawrence and the town to give the current configuration a chance, and see how it works. Lawrence agreed to give it a try, providing the town would be willing to close the northern end if it doesn't work.

"We could take action immediately next summer," said Town Manager Mark Haddad, who also apologized to Lawrence for not including him in the initial discussion involving the parking lot.

Shadow book

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will host Laura Robinson on Nov. 10 from 3-5pm. Robinson is the creator of a shadow book, "William and The Christmas Moon". This captivating book is both a work of art and an interactive story. By using a flashlight (included) to illuminate the text and cast shadows on the wall of a darkened bedroom, parent and child together can create a dramatically unfolding adventure. This is Robinson's second shadow casting story. "William and the Magic Ring" was the first and is currently in its fifth printing and had previously only been available through the Museum of Fine Arts.

Robinson resides in Hingham, with her husband and two children. Free. Please call (781) 383-2665 for more information or to order your signed copy.

Vets breakfast

To honor veterans, the Cohasset Elder Affairs will host its annual Veterans Day breakfast Friday, Nov. 17, at 10 a.m. Anna Abrruzzese and her crew will serve a buffet breakfast featuring a guest speaker from the Department of Veterans Affairs. Cost is $5. Please call if you can make it, 383-9112.

Supper at the center, the students at the Cohasset Middle School will serve supper at the center Wednesday, Nov. 15, from 5 to 6:30 p.m. The meal is free, register early because seating is limited.

Pumpkin contest

The Silver Spoon Café in Cohasset Village sponsored their fifth annual pumpkin painting contest. More than 60 children ages 4-12 came to the Silver Spoon Café to paint a pumpkin during a three-day period.

Mary Ford, editor of the Cohasset Mariner, was this year's judge. Ford chose a grand-prize winning pumpkin from each age group. However, everyone was a winner and received a smaller prize for doing such a great job.

A special thanks goes to the sponsors, Silver Spoon Café, Russo's & Sons, Cerellis, N.E. Coffee, Rosev Dairy, N.E. Linen, Dole & Bailey, South Shore Community Center, Wise Chips, P.J.'s Distribution, Perkins Paper and Polar Beverage.

This year's grand-prize winners were: age 4, Jackie Driscoll; age 5, Gregory Berube; age 6, Elizabeth Heagarty; age 7, Michelle Berube; age 8, Kyle Desisto; age 9, Page Desisto; age 10, Deirdre Lothrop and Chloe Kolines; age 11, Colleen Richardson; and age 12, Kelsie Bell.

Reading in the dark

Shadow casting bedtime stories are a cut above

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Hingham author Laura Robinson is changing the face of children's books in a new and innovative way. She's making them more interactive.

The first of Robinson's unique and interactive works "William and The Magic Ring" was published in 1998, and she just released a new book — just in time for the holidays — titled "William and The Christmas Moon." Both works are what Robinson refers to as "shadow casting bedtime stories."

Robinson will show off her shadow casting stories at a book signing this weekend at Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset. She'll be at the book store from 3 to 5 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 10.

If you've ever had trouble getting your kids to turn off the lights and get into bed, Robinson's books might be just the solution.

"The books come with a little flashlight to illuminate the text of the book. But the pictures in the books are what are called 'laser-cut images.' When you shine the flashlight at the base of those images, the shadows of those images are cast upon the wall."
Author Laura Robinson

'When you are trying to quiet your kids down for the evening, it's nice to be able to have the lights out, and to have a book that can actually be read in the dark. Keeping that abrupt light away can be kind of soothing for a child. It's just another step closer to being able to put your kids to be in a peaceful way."

The books bring parents and children together to create a new bedtime ritual.

"The idea behind these two books is to shut off the lights and to get in bed and read with your child," Robinson said. "The books come with a little flashlight to illuminate the text of the book. But the pictures in the books are what are called 'laser-cut images.' When you shine the flashlight at the base of those images, the shadows of those images are cast upon the wall."

The shadows help bring the picture books to life and with the story written in poetic verse adds to effect.

"These books really have the ability to transform a child's bedroom into a type of theater," she said. "Basically, children who read these books are offered the opportunity to really enter the world of William, the main character of the stories."

Robinson named her main character after her six-year-old son, William. She also has a four-year-old son, James.

Accentuate the positives

Lighten, brighten, freshen up home for sale

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

With shorter days and grayer skies, home sellers might need to put a little extra effort into making their house look appealing to buyers at this time of year. But brokers say there are lots of things to do to make your house look good despite the bare trees and waning light.

"Make it as light and bright as possible inside," said Philip Ford, owner and manager of Century 21 Walker Brothers Realty in Duxbury. "Accent the positives in your home with light, if possible. Even though the elements may be working against you, your house can still look warm and welcoming," he said.

Real estate professionals say light is all-important when buyers are looking at a home for the first time. Leave drapes open and the shades up, so brokers don't have to fumble with them. Keep the lights on or on a timer scheduled to coincide with showings. Even a fire in the fireplace, if possible, can cast a warm glow.

"Make your house feel like a home someone else can be comfortable in. Keep it free of clutter, so people can envision their own things inside," said Ford.

Many brokers also recommend keeping the house nice and warm, even if that means leaving the heat on when the house is empty all day. A few extra dollars spent on the heating bill could pay off in the selling price if the house is nice and cozy.

Ford said his office also offers a "virtual tour" via computer of listings, so buyers can see how a house looks, both inside and out, during different times of the year. "This way, people can see what the gardens look like in June or the master bedroom at sunrise with digital photography. But even a few snapshots of the garden in full bloom left on the counter can help," he said.

Other tips for creating that homey atmosphere: light candles, simmer potpourri or cinnamon tea on the stove, even bake an apple pie or bread when expecting a showing. Brokers say the fragrance in a home is very important at this time of year, when most homes are closed up tight against the cold outside. So keep kitchens and baths clean, shampoo rugs and clean drapes. Watch for cigarette and pet odors, too.

Penny Locke, a senior sales associate with Coldwell Banker Hunneman in Scituate, said that to increase curb appeal, keep up with the raking and sweeping out front to keep things looking neat. "The grass will stay green for a long time still, so yards can look nice even without

Stovetop rice pudding

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

One can bake rice pudding or simply make it on the stovetop, the latter method being almost identical to that for making risotto. Oven baking tends to produce a drier, firmer pudding, whereas stovetop cooking makes a creamy, loose dessert, which I prefer. The stovetop method also has the benefit of being simple.

Rice is cooked with water in a large saucepan until most of the water is absorbed. Milk and sugar are then added, and the mixture continues to cook until it thickens and turns creamy and rich. At the end of cooking, flavorings are added, either traditional spices such as cinnamon or Indian-inspired ingredients such as rose water or cardamom.

To develop my own recipe for stovetop rice pudding, I started by doing some homework on different types of rice. There are three basic types in terms of length: short, medium, and long. Short-grain rice, the type often served in Chinese restaurants, is sticky and ideal for use with chopsticks, with sushi, in puddings, in paella, or cooked as risotto (Arborio rice, an Italian short-grain variety, is used for risotto). The longer varieties, which are less starchy and therefore fluffier when cooked, are generally more popular in Western cultures. Medium-grain rice is more similar to short grain than long grain in terms of cooking properties and can be used as a substitute; short- and long-grain rice are never interchangeable

There is very little difference in nutritional value among the different grain lengths. In terms of dimensions, each grain of long-grain rice is three to five times longer than it is wide; short-grain rice is twice as long as it is wide.

After making puddings with each of the three basic lengths of rice, I with much more liquid to rice than one would expect from a standard savory rice recipe, the reason being that I wanted to create a sauce, not a bowl of sticky rice. I kept the amount of sugar relatively modest and played with flavorings, preferring a bit of orange zest and nuts to the usual cinnamon and nutmeg combination. (I have included a recipe for this standard approach as well.)

Finally, I found that the cooking time can vary a lot depending on the stovetop you're cooking on and the saucepan you're cooking in. Occasional stirring is not a bad idea, especially if you don't have heavy-bottomed cookware. The lighter stuff can scorch foods readily.

STOVETOP RICE PUDDING

Rice pudding doesn't need eggs or other thickeners because the rice itself is full of starch. Just cook short-grain white rice in water and then milk on top of the stove until it thickens. This stovetop pudding is relatively loose compared with most baked rice puddings, but it is also creamier and more delicate. For a thicker pudding, let it sit covered on top of the stove after cooking for up to 2 hours.

1/2 cup short-grain white rice
2 1/2 cups water
2 cups milk
1/2 teaspoon vanilla
7 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons orange peel, minced
1/4 cup almonds, finely chopped

Combine the rice and water in a large saucepan and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to a simmer and cook for 40 minutes or until most of the water has been absorbed. Add the milk, vanilla, and sugar, bring back to a boil, reduce heat to a simmer, and cook until mixture is the consistency of a thick porridge, about 1 hour, 10 minutes. Add the orange peel and almonds, and stir to combine. The pudding can be served hot, warm, or at room temperature.. Serves 6

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 8

Gear up for an exciting day. At 12:02 a.m. the moon enters fiery Aries. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Uranus warns you to expect the unexpected. Be flexible and go with the flow. Get back on track with exercise and physical fitness programs. The best period for launching ventures and starting important projects occurs between 9:15-9:43 p.m., when the Aries moon forms a harmonious alignment to Pluto.

THURSDAY, NOV. 9

If you are well organized, you can be extremely productive today. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it. The moon travels in energetic Aries. In addition, Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, prepares to form a harmonious contact to Neptune. This influence neutralizes the aggressive and combative nature of the sign Aries. People are more relaxed and easygoing. Projects should come together smoothly. The green light is on for new starts of all kinds.

FRIDAY, NOV. 10

The Aries moon forms its last major alignment to a planet and becomes inactive at 12:07 a.m. A Taurus moon takes over at 6:12 a.m., and the final windup to a full moon begins. Alignments of the moon and Mars to Neptune help to soften the intensity of this full moon. You can make gains developing creative projects. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. The evening is prime for social or romantic get-togethers.

SATURDAY, NOV. 11

A lunar alignment to Uranus warns you to avoid rigid schedules this morning. People may be late for appointments; there are likely to be unexpected delays or obstacles. The full moon culminates at 4:15 p.m., 20-degrees of Taurus/Scorpio. Channel high energy constructively; you can be most productive this afternoon. Give loved ones extra strokes. Be more caring and attentive to children, pets.

SUNDAY, NOV. 12

This is a great day for all social gatherings, spending quality time with friends and family. At 6:12 a.m. the Taurus moon becomes inactive until 9:27 a.m., when a lively Gemini moon takes over. This moon forms easy contacts to Neptune, Mars and Jupiter during the afternoon and evening. Kick back, relax and go for the good times.

MONDAY, NOV. 13

It may be difficult to focus on business and practical matters today and tomorrow. The moon continues its travel in Gemini, active until 1:51 p.m. In addition, Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, prepares to interact with Neptune. Sleep on new ideas and postpone taking action for a few days. This is not a favorable time for signing contracts or making important decisions. Don't take anything or anyone too seriously. On the other hand, influences are prime for developing art, music, dance, photography projects.

TUESDAY, NOV. 14

Yesterday's advice pertains to today as well. An inactive Gemini moon can make for a slow start this morning. Pay attention to details; finish projects already begun. Others may be scattered, distracted, talkative. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 11:21 a.m. However, the applying Mercury/Neptune alignment continues to generate a dreamy mood. Get extra rest tonight.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 15

This day holds high potential for productivity. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. The green light is on for new beginnings across the board. Influences are particularly favorable for making decisions and negotiating deals regarding land, property, home improvement. The moon continues to travel in the sign Cancer. Share a special meal this evening with family and/or close friends.

THURSDAY, NOV. 16

Get an early start to this day. For favorable planetary influences, you must launch ventures before 9:30 a.m., when the Cancer moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn and becomes inactive. In addition, Mars and Jupiter interact at 9:38 a.m., generating high energy and enthusiasm. The remainder of the day brings a time to finish old business, handle routine chores and errands. The moon enters Leo at 1:19 p.m. and aligns with Neptune and Mercury in the evening. Let fun and games top your agenda.

FRIDAY, NOV. 17

The moon continues to travel in playful Leo. This is a good day for working on projects that require input, cooperation from others. If you can, take extra time out for yourself, to relax and enjoy favorite leisure activities. A lunar polarity to Uranus at 6:12 p.m. may disrupt the flow of the day. Avoid rigid time schedules. Don't be a hermit tonight. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SATURDAY, NOV. 18

An alignment of the sun and Saturn takes the spotlight this weekend. It brings an emphasis on self-discipline, attention to duty and responsibility. Tackle jobs you've been putting off and get them out of the way. Zero in on commitments you've made or debts you've incurred and fulfill them. Hard work and self-sacrifice will pay off. The Leo moon aligns with the sun and Saturn until 12:03 p.m., when it becomes inactive. At 4:15 p.m. the moon enters discriminating Virgo.

Alison Barr conducts her "Joyful Listening" class at Norwell's James Library and Center for the Arts.

Classical music classes are a joy

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

If you've ever wanted to learn the finer points about the world of classical music, Alison Barr is a person you need to meet

The Hanover woman is hosting a new series of classes she developed and named "Joyful Listening." All the classes are held in the "Victorian Room" at the James Library and Center for the Arts in Norwell.

"These are classes which guide music lovers of any ilk through the realm of classical music," Barr said. "Whether you're a concert-goer, a musician, or simply a listener, these classes will give you a better insight into classical music's history and harmonies."

Barr is currently offering a three-part series of classes on Beethoven as a part of Joyful Listening. Although the series began Nov. 3, she said the public can feel free to join up late.

The next four-part series Barr offers will take place sometime in January—she said she wants to get through the holidays before starting another session.

And although Barr enjoys teaching the current Beethoven class, she said likes teaching a little bit of everything within the context of most of her classes. She said usually, she teaches her students about all four major periods of classical music—Baroque, Classical, Romantic, and 20th century.

Those periods will be the focus of her next session in January, and will continue to be the main focus of the Joyful Listening program.

"I really believe these classes can offer people a new way of listening to and appreciating music," Barr said. "And it's about teaching people about this kind of music in a way which is accessible to them. Accessible, yet meaty."

Within the context of her classes, Barr teaches lessons about composers, how their music was put together, what makes a good composition, and what kinds of instruments are used in the context of an orchestra.

Barr, who has been a private piano instructor for the past 23 years, often plays her piano in order to give her students first-hand musical demonstrations. Other than her love of the piano, and her talent for playing it, Barr also holds qualifications including a bachelor's degree in music education from the University of Maine and a masters degree in piano performance from Boston University.

"I am in this class full time now," Barr said. "Many people are calling me to say they're interested in what I'm doing. Some of them want to get into the current session, but some just want to reserve a seat for the next one. There's so many ways these classes could go, because when it comes to classical music, there's a lot to talk about. And again, these are classes which are accessible to anyone. There's no snob element here, and to me, there's no such thing as a dumb question."

Barr said the idea to start a series of classes on classical music came to her last January as she taught her regular piano lessons.

"I had thought about teaching some classes on music for a long time," she said, "and then when my piano students started asking me questions about form and certain instruments, I knew it was time for me to do something. Last January, I wrote a proposal to the James Library in Norwell, asking them if I could use some space over there to teach the classes. Within a week, the people at the library gave it the go."

Her first session of Joyful Listening was held in March, then she held another one in June. The special Beethoven class is only Barr's third installment in her Joyful Listening saga. And she says, "so far, so good."

"It's all about teaching people to listen to music on a different level than they always have," she added. "It's about having a listening experience that's just rich and joyful. I'm trying to teach people how to listen with a ready spirit and to be fulfilled by the music they're listening to. Classical music can be a fascinating thing for anyone, because generally, without knowing about certain classical compositions, people are only hearing the tip of the iceberg."

Barr said she specifically teaches the ins and outs of classical music because it's her area of expertise, but she said she feels it's a type of music which is getting more popular.

"I think there's already a great appreciation for classical music on the South Shore, but I think that it's growing," she said. "The James Library hosts their classical concert series each year, and then you have great organizations out there like the Hingham Symphony Orchestra. There's tons of opportunities on the South Shore to get involved with classical music, and it's great music for the holidays as well. The bottom line is that many people want to know more about it, but they just might not admit that in public. And the main goal of the Joyful Listening classes are to give people a sense of not being intimidated by classical music."

And Barr says the Joyful Listening classes will help accomplish that goal. But she said the most important thing she is trying to do with the classes is keep the spirit of music alive within people's hearts.

"Having music in our lives is absolutely crucial," she said. "It's transformative. If music suddenly didn't exist, I think we'd be in trouble. With the way people focus so much on computers and technology, we need to keep in touch with music for our spirits."

For more information on various Joyful Listening sessions, costs and times, call Barr at (781) 982-8920. She said most four-week sessions cost a total of $80.

Swinging in Quincy

Raffael's serves up a musical treat

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Allison Couture

In the past few years, swing music has experienced a renaissance thanks to performers like the Squirrel Nut Zippers and Brian Setzer, and a popular television commercial campaign for the Gap.

While this retro craze has seen swing updated, the current J.M. Productions Dinner Theater presentation of "The All Night Strut!" at Raffael's in North Quincy is a faithful tribute to this 1940s musical genre. The show also serves up a side dish of classic pop music from the 1920s and 1930s.

An energetic quartet of performers, dressed in elegant 1940s era evening wear, starts strong with the Glenn Miller standard, "Chattanooga Choo Choo."

Cab Calloway's tale of "Minnie the Moocher" is suavely told by Ethan Paulini, in a promising J.M. Productions debut. Paulini is also touchingly understated on the depression-era lament, "Brother Can You Spare A Dime."

Ethan Paulini

The show's other male lead is South Shore musical theater stalwart, Duane Sullivan, whose smooth as silk tenor voice caresses the ballad, "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square."

Allison Couture contributes stylish period choreography, no small feat on Raffael's postage-stamp-sized performing area, and lends her perky alto belt to songs like "Jukebox Saturday Night."

Lauren Dooley, seen previously in "A Grand Night for Singing," here manages to effectively match her trained voice to this show's jazz ensemble stylings. Dooley's distinctive voice is also showcased on solos within the second act's World War II medley, including the wistful "I'll Be Seeing You."

House Musical Director Rob Goldman once again delivers solid piano accompaniment and even takes his own star turn on the Boogie-Woogie "Beat Me Daddy, Eight to the Bar." Goldman's efforts would be enhanced, however, with live drums and bass, which he has had alongside him in previous J.M. outings.

Lauren Dooley

The real strengths of this production come from the company's excellent handling of some challenging group vocal arrangements. Couture, Dooley, Paulini and Sullivan offer a carefully nuanced treatment of the novelty song, "Java Jive," that would make the Manhattan Transfer proud. The two couples pair well on the humorous Rodgers and Hart tune, "A Fine Romance." The quartet also nails the intricately arranged "Fascinating Rhythm" and clearly enjoys the wimsy of "Hit That Jive Jack" and "It Don't Mean A Thing."

The combination of a terrific show and a tasty meal make "The All Night Strut!" at Raffael's well worth the buck (and wing!).

(J.M. Productions will present "The All Night Strut!" at Raffael's, 1 Enterprise Drive, North Quincy, through November 30. For tickets and information, call 617/786-7469.)

Innovative lending program helps sellers, buyers clear financing hurdles

By Carol Bulman
PRESIDENT CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

A unique and innovative lending program offers home sellers a wide variety of options for short-term financing. Through Conway Capital Lenders, a subsidiary of Jack Conway and Company, sellers now have the ability to apply for short-term financing to cover the following:

•Repairs of septic systems to meet the Title 5 code

• Removal of lead paint

• Renovations and upgrades to prepare your home for sale

•Costs of satisfying concerns identified during a home inspection This entity was established as a result of the growing need for funds to solve many hurdles faced by today's home sellers.

Regulations imposed by the state and the federal governments, specifically the Title 5 septic code and lead paint-removal law, often place a financial burden on homeowners when they decide to sell their properties. In recognition of these challenges, we created this separate company to offer sellers who list their homes with Conway a convenient way to finance these upgrades. Home inspections often present another financial burden for the home seller, as buyers often will request that repairs be done as a result of the inspection. CCL is a source for short-term funds for these repairs to upgrade a property in preparation for sale.

Carol Bulman

Recently, a senior couple who were selling their family home of 35 years to enter a local assisted-living facility were helped by this program. The property's septic system failed the Title 5 test and needed a $12,000 upgrade. Although this couple had fixed income and equity in their home, they were unable to pay to upgrade their septic system before the closing. Enter CCL. The real estate agent brought together the sellers and a mortgage specialist from Conway Financial Services.

As a result, the sellers borrowed the funds to upgrade the septic system, were able to market the property with a new Title 5-approved system and the sellers received the price they wanted for their home. At paper passing, the sellers paid off the short-term loan, and all parties involved were happy.

Conway Capital Lenders also helps buyers. CCL offers short-term financing solutions such as bridge loans or second mortgages. This program is also available to investors for short-term construction and renovation loans. Another customer of the Jack Conway Company planned to tap $50,000 in equity from the sale of their current home to use as a down payment for the purchase of a new home. They found a new home sooner than expected, and faced two challenges: First, how to purchase the second home before getting the money from the first sale; and second, if they did find a down payment source, how to pay for two houses until the first one sold.

This is a great example of how these programs assisted a Conway buyer. Because of this buyer's good credit standing, the equity available between the two properties, and the fact that the first home was under agreement, CCL loaned this customer down-payment money to buy the new house.

As an added benefit, Conway Capital deferred payments during the 30 days the loan was outstanding. Once the first property was sold, the debt was repaid in full.

Please call Conway Financial Services or a Jack Conway and Company agent for more information about how Conway Capital Lenders can help make the purchase your dream home or the sale of your present house a reality.

Carol Bulman is president of Norwell-based Conway Financial Services, a mortgage brokerage firm owned by Jack Conway and Company that maintains correspondent lending relationships with some of the top lenders in the East and originates a full line of mortgage products.

For more information about financing issues, call CFS at (781) 681-9400 or (888) 831-1181.

Home inspections often present another financial burden for the home seller, as buyers often will request that repairs be done as a result of the inspection. CCL is a source for short-term funds for these repairs to upgrade a property in preparation for sale.

He who hesitates is lost in court of law

BY ANTHONY SUMMERS

It was the Greek philosopher Cicero who said "Before you trust a man, eat a peck of salt with him." Unfortunately Francis McGuire was probably on a salt free diet when he hired Michael Woyciechouski to build his house. The Bristol County Supreme Court case of McGuire v. Woyciechouski d/b/a Yankee Builders & Contractors was decided on Sept. 25, just about one month ago.

Anthony Summers

BACKGROUND

In 1988, Francis McGuire, (McGuire, Plaintiff) an architect, entered into a contract for construction of a home with Michael Woyciechouski, d/b/a Yankee Builders and Contractors, (Yankee, Defendant) a home builder. The house was to be constructed on McGuire's land at 505 Old County Road, Westport. The written building contract contained various specifications, and called for installation of an EPDM rubber membrane roof. During construction, McGuire visited the site on various occasions and consulted with Yankee.

In 1989, shortly after McGuire moved in, the roof began to leak. Yankee speculated that the problem was defective window units, which were replaced at McGuire's expense. When the leaking persisted, Yankee replaced some flashing. Over the course of the ensuing years, the water seepage was unrelenting. Upon inspection by the membrane manufacturer, McGuire was advised that there was evidence of improper installation.

In 1998, McGuire hired a roofing contractor who discovered that in fact, the roof had been installed improperly allowing water infiltration, which had damaged the structure and electrical system. In the course of the repair, it was also observed that Yankee had not only failed to comply with the state building code, but also the specifications of the contract with McGuire. The damage was both extensive and expensive to repair, and so McGuire commenced an action alleging both misrepresentation and breach of contract.

DISCUSSION OF LAW

He who hesitates is sometimes lost, and Massachusetts has a statute which gives teeth to that homily. MGL ch. 260, section 2B states that an action for damages arising out of a deficiency in the construction of an improvement to real estate must be commenced within six years of the completion of the improvement. However the statue goes on to provide that if the builder (Yankee) conceals the negligent construction, the six-year period doesn't begin until the victim McGuire discovers the defect.

DECISION

Yankee completed the home in 1989, and McGuire was aware of the leak almost immediately. Over the course of nine years McGuire complained to Yankee, but Yankee never identified the problem. McGuire didn't start his lawsuit until 1998, nine years after the job was completed. Well, even though Yankee failed to complete the job in a workmanlike fashion, and even though Yankee failed to follow the specifications in the contract with McGuire, there was no evidence that Yankee fraudulently concealed its work. Also, McGuire was an architect, a construction professional who had observed the project as it was being built. The court therefore determined that since McGuire did not start the action within the statutory six-year period, the claim is time barred. McGuire loses before he even starts.

LEGAL ADVICE

You may have suffered damage resulting from another's negligence or suffered as a result of a builder's shady workmanship, but if you teeter-tooter and vacillate as you decide what action to take, you may lose the case because you have waited too long. Most claims if not pursued timely will be lost because of the statute of limitations.

How high can they go?

Home prices start to moderate

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

Home prices in some communities on the South Shore have begun to level off, according to some area real estate brokers, who say single-family home prices may have peaked for the year.

"I've seen some leveling off over the past four or five weeks, and even some price drops. There are more and more every day," said Jim Cotter, owner and principal of Mayflower Realty in Plymouth, which handles properties in Plymouth, Carver and Kingston.

"Almost every day, there are new prices on listings, sometimes five or six of them," said Cotter.

But Cotter said the change is more of a market adjustment than a real change in the market overall.

"Many of these houses were overpriced to begin with, but they were selling most of the time because inventory was so low. They aren't selling as quickly now," said Cotter, who believes buyers are balking at what they can get in a home for their money.

"And the problem with just going ahead and overpricing now is that when a house stays on (the market) for too long, it gets stale and no one wants to look at it," he said.

Cotter said that it's especially important now for sellers to listen to their broker when they recommend a price. "A seller can be their own worst enemy. If they don't take the advice of their broker and go for the gold, they could end up with silver," said Cotter.

Barbara Phillips of DeWolfe Realty in Marshfield agrees. "The buyers are out there, but they're not so grabby. The prices can only go so high, and they have been over inflated over the past several months, so there's bound to be a correction. Sellers have to be a little bit more careful about how they price their home."

Phillips said one exception is the very high-end properties. "The million-dollar and over properties, waterfront properties are still flying out the door at any price. When they have that kind of money to spend, they just want it," said Phillips.

"I've seen some leveling off over the past four or five weeks, and even some price drops. There are more and more every day. Almost every day, there are new prices on listings, sometimes five or six of them."

– Jim Cotter, owner and principal of Mayflower Realty

Phillips said that in general, she's finding that inventory in up, also driving down prices a little bit. "This time last year, Pembroke had only 40 listings. Now there's 75."

But that varies from town to town, according to South Shore real estate brokers, who say overall, inventory is still low in most areas.

"This is about the lowest I've seen it in 18 years," said Cotter. "It's particularly bad for first-time homebuyers. Those homes are practically nonexistent," he said. Cotter said that the lowest-priced single-family home he has listed is a five-room ranch with one bath priced at $159,000.

"For a couple who just got approved for a mortgage at $100,000, I have nothing for them," he said.

Donna Wood, of the MacDonald & Wood Real Estate Group in Duxbury, said she has seen prices level off throughout most of the market with the exception of high-end homes.

"There's virtually no waterfront available on the South Shore right now, so those prices will remain high, but I'm seeing prices for first-time buyers here become more stable for the first time in a long time," said Wood, who said prices may have hit a ceiling.

In Duxbury, Wood has listed a two-bedroom ranch with a detached two-car garage on nearly an acre for $244,900.

"For Duxbury, that's a good price. It's become difficult to get into Duxbury for less than $300,000," she said.

Wood said there has been a slight increase in inventory, as well. "Hingham, for example, has more inventory than there was a while ago. But it isn't a dramatic jump," she said.

But Wood, who is president of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors, said that the leveling off of prices on the South Shore is not across the board. "There are communities that are still seeing prices go up. It varies from town to town, even from neighborhood to neighborhood," she said.

John Tronka, of Century 21 Annex Realty in Hanover, said he believes prices there are up from this time last year. "The market is strong and the homes certainly pricier than they were last year, and interest rates are better, so there are buyers out there," he said.

Tronka said that in Hanover, only two homes are currently listed for under $200,000. Of 61 currently listed in Hanover, 25 homes are in the $170,000 to $300,000 range, and the rest are over $300,000.

"Hanover is becoming very expensive and I'm not seeing the prices come down," he said.

Lighten, brighten, freshen up home for sale

flowers," she said. When the snow falls, be vigilant about clearing driveways and walks of snow, ice and slush. Keep door locks deiced, as well.

Since many showings will occur after dark, keep all exterior lights on. Locke also recommends homeowners choose a focal point, usually a front door, to grab the eye of potential homebuyers when they drive up to the property.

"Make the front door look as pretty as possible. Hang a festive wreath with lots of bright oranges and reds. Put some bright mums on the front steps or porch," she said. If needed, a new coat of shiny paint can really brighten up a front door, too.

Locke said that inside, she carefully and tactfully tells homeowners, if necessary, to de-clutter.

Brokers say that if you're ready to sell, don't wait until spring. Company transfers keep the buyers out there at any time of year, and often people with children are looking to move during the holiday break from school.

"People have a lot of things they have saved over the years, especially if they have been in the house a long time. But once they have made the decision to sell, they are usually receptive to suggestions," he said.

Locke recommends clearing big pieces of furniture out of small rooms to make them appear more spacious. "Put them in a corner of the garage or basement. It can even be worth it to hire storage for the time it takes to sell the house," she said.

And as the holidays approach, go ahead and decorate, according to experts. Most homes never look so good as they do at Christmastime, and allowing buyers to view your home when it is at its most attractive can only help the sale. Get the kids and other family members to help with the cleaning during this busy time.

"The holidays can be a great time to sell a home. Homes look beautiful at Christmastime. Keep it festive and bright, but not cluttered," said Locke.

Set the dining room table with your best holiday china, put special guest towels in the bathrooms. Brokers say that despite the worsening weather, this can be a good time of year to sell. "We always say there never is a bad time to present a property for sale, but most buyers are serious buyers at this time of year," said Ford.

Brokers say that if you're ready to sell, don't wait until spring. Company transfers keep the buyers out there at any time of year, and often people with children are looking to move during the holiday break from school. Often, end-of-year commissions and Christmas bonuses lead to homebuyers, too, according to experts.

"Those looking are not out for Sunday drives. And because there are still more buyers out there than there are homes, sellers can do really well at this time of year," she said.

Information is current as of November 06, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage. FHA 3%–5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM-adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV-loan to value. MI-mortgage insurance. NA-not available. NQ-rates not quoted. Lenders: to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Shadow casting stories are a cut above

"William and The Christmas Moon," will be the featured book at the upcoming signing. It is a tale which Robinson says stresses the concept of non-materialism.

In the story, William is so excited about Christmas presents that he decides at the beginning of the story to wait up for Santa Claus. But as he looks out one of the windows of his house, he sees the hill where he and his grandfather had been sledding the night before. He then falls into a dream illustrated by the images contained in the book.

"It's really a visual escape," Robinson said of her latest publication. She said readers of the book will be able to experience shadow-cast images like a tree outside a window, various winter nightscapes, and a variety of animals.

"The idea behind these two books is to shut off the lights and to get in bed and read with your child."

Author Laura Robinson

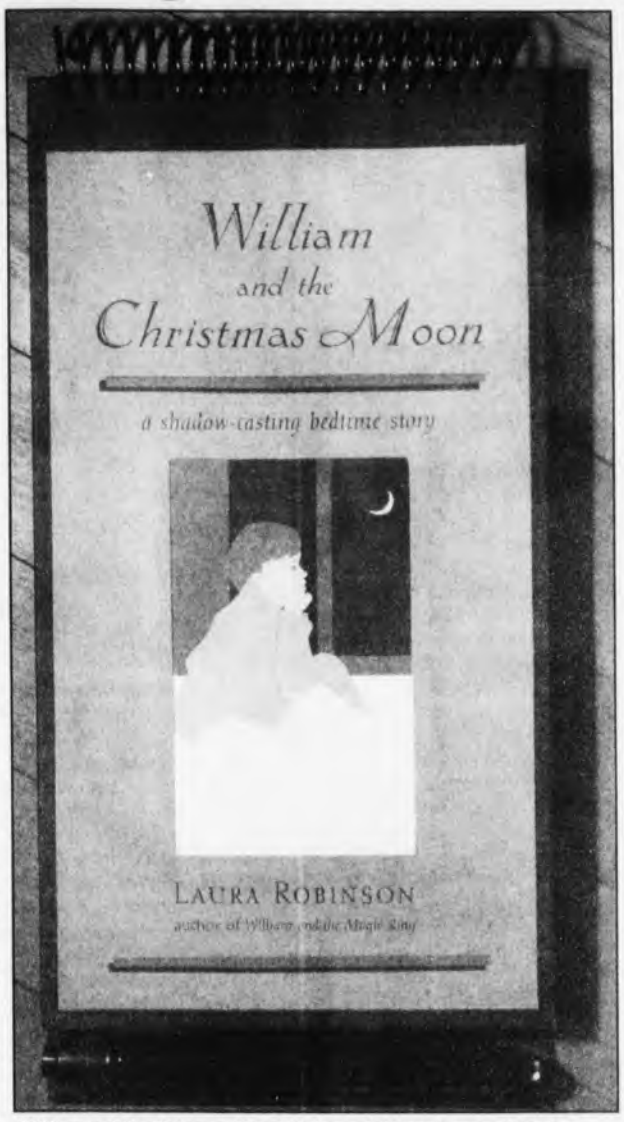
"We even get to take a sleigh ride in the sky with William during the course of the story," Robinson added. "And when he wakes up from his dream, William find he's realized the real meaning of Christmas."

Robinson's first book, "William and The Magic Ring," uses the same shadow casting techniques along a different story line. In that story, William finds a magic ring which gives him power over all the animals in the forest. Robinson said images of various woodland animals help demonstrate the power of William's ring.

"The first book (Magic Ring) was more about shadows," Robinson noted, "and the second book (Christmas) was more about light."

"I don't think many people have ever seen books like these. They're very different," she added.

Coming up with the creative concept for the books took Robinson a lot of time and hard work to develop.



"William and the Christmas Moon," is Laura Robinson's second shadow casting story for children.

Robinson was always crafty. When she was 14 years old, she started building wooden boats in the form of kayaks and canoes. She still engages in the hobby to this day.

Robinson earned a degree in civil engineering from Princeton University in New Jersey. She then went on to get a masters degree in architecture from Harvard University. For the past eight years, she has served as a professor of architecture at the Rhode Island School of Design, but now, she is a full-time children's book author.

"The inspiration for these books started when I was teaching architecture," she said. "I did a lot of work with light with my students, and that kind of started me thinking. But the other form of inspiration came when I was very young. My sister and I used to lie in our beds staring up into the branches of the large oak tree outside our bedroom window, searching for figures of animals and strange beings. When cars drove by, their headlights created shadow 'movies' which flickered across our wall."

Having children of her own introduced Robinson to the world of children's literature and she decided contribute to it herself.

"When I had my own children, I started reading a lot of children's books, and eventually, I just went ahead and started working on the first one."

"I have some books on deck for adults and children," Robinson said. "But those are more about art theory. In any case, they can be used by both age groups."

Right now, Robinson said the shadow casting books are the works on which she's focusing.

"I'm only teaching part time (at the Rhode Island School of Design) right now," she said. "I'm very happy to have writing become a full-time thing for me. It's also nice to know I have a certain synergy with children. My son William certainly enjoys being in the limelight right now. Writing children's books can be a lot of work, but it's definitely a lot of fun. To me, great children's books are about a main character's search or journey—the best ones are where the readers get to go on that same journey."

Both of Robinson's shadow casting books are available at Amazon.com. Both Buttonwoods Books and Toys locations in Cohasset and Hingham and Bookport in Hingham, Storybook Cove in Hanover and A Wing & A Prayer in Norwell also carry them. The books can also be ordered out of Boston's Museum of Fine Arts Catalogue by calling (800) 225-5592.

Maintaining the November landscape

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Weary from hours of raking, chopping, trimming and hauling, I paused for a few moments to soak in the sun's warmth and savor the sights and sounds of a glorious autumn afternoon. Squirrels and chipmunks scurried to and fro, foraging about in the leaf litter, as they gathered nuts and seeds to store for the chilly days ahead. Blue jays gorged themselves with sunflower seeds from my bird feeders, depositing them in dozens of secret hiding places. The majority of these reserves are likely to be forgotten during the upcoming months and there are sure to be innumerable sunflower sprouts come spring.

As I gently raked debris away from the perennials in a shady border, I was delighted to discover a forgotten, late-blooming gem known as Ladies' tresses (Spiranthes) hidden among the leaves. This native orchid produces slender spikes of small, waxy white flowers and can be found growing locally in damp meadows and bogs. Although not particularly showy, its unique late blooms are a welcome addition to the shady border at a time when few flowers remain.

It would appear that Mother Nature is reluctant to bring this year's growing season to a close. Despite many a frosty evening, severe cold has yet to blacken many tender plants even though the month of November is upon us.

Nearby, the tall white spires of the autumn snakeroot (Cimicifuga simplex) swayed in the breeze. Its distinctive bottlebrush blooms and attractive, divided foliage were elegantly displayed against the bronze foliage of a PJM rhododendron. Dancing on 3-foot stems, the pristine white blossoms of a late-blooming windflower (Anemone) glistened in the sun's slanted rays highlighted by the spectacular mottled green, red, bronze and cream variegated foliage of its companion plant, Persicaria "Painter's Palette."

It would appear that Mother Nature is reluctant to bring this year's growing season to a close. Despite many a frosty evening, severe cold has yet to blacken many tender plants even though the month of November is upon us. Geraniums, alyssum, snapdragons, verbena, and even a few marigolds and impatiens, add touches of color to the autumn landscape. The flowers and foliage of tender summer bulbs, including cannas and dahlias, linger as well, delaying the process of digging and storage.

Stormy weather has undressed many of our trees and shrubs, covering lawns and gardens with a colorful blanket of drifting leaves. While many gardeners view this covering as Mother Nature's way of providing a protective, cozy winter mulch, soggy leaves, especially those from maples, can quickly suffocate underlying grass or plants, promote diseases and make an ideal refuge for foraging rodents and voracious slugs and snails. Frequent raking, until all our deciduous trees have shed their leaves, is an advisable practice. Decomposed leaves are an exceptional source of organic material; shred your fallen leaves with a lawnmower or "leaf-eating device" and add them to the compost pile, turn them into your vegetable garden, or use them as a mulch on beds and borders later in the season. Your worm population will soar.

During November, the lawn requires only an occasional mowing until the grass eventually stops growing later this month. Mower blades should be gradually lowered from mid-summer heights to approximately 2 inches by your last mowing. An application of lime at any time during the fall is beneficial and early November is an ideal time to spread a winterizer fertilizer to promote a healthy root system and an early greening of the lawn next spring.

As autumn progresses and our deciduous trees, shrubs and perennials shed their colorful autumn garb, many gardeners assume that cold weather and bare branches are an indication that these plants are no longer functioning. Despite many chilly evenings to come, the ground is not likely to be frozen for a month or more and although most plants are entering a dormant period and may show no signs of life above ground, most root systems are still actively growing, absorbing moisture and nutrients to assist with winter survival and spring vigor.

Mother Nature has been generous with the provision of adequate rainfall this season, reducing the need for supplemental watering except for newly set plants, but an application of an organic fertilizer, such as Plant-O-Ganic or Plant-tone around trees, shrubs and perennials will be readily absorbed promoting strong, healthy growth next season. For those plants which have demonstrated sparse, diminished or non-existent bloom in recent years, work superphosphate into the soil. This nutrient, which is the middle number listed in a fertilizer's formulation, promotes flower production and travels slowly through the soil. For woody plants, use a stake to create shallow holes at the outer reach of the plant's branches and fill with a mixture of soil, peat and the superphosphate to enable this critical nutrient to reach the root zone in a more timely fashion.

The primary directive for November is to trim, rake and haul leaves and debris away from trees, shrubs, and perennial borders to reduce the possibility of pests and diseases during the winter months. A thorough fall cleanup saves valuable time during the hectic spring season.

Range of village options on table

Forum focuses on sidewalks

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Which do you prefer: a village tune-up, complete overhaul or something in-between?

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation posed those questions to about 30 residents at a special forum at Town Hall on the village last week. The CRC is a private non-profit group, created to work with the town to improve the village and harbor areas.

"We are sensitive that Cohasset Village has charming qualities that exist today," said Steven Cecil of the Cecil Group, design and engineering consultants hired by CRC. Cecil said it was important not to "erase" those qualities and CRC would examine "little things, bigger things and dramatic changes" according to the community's wishes.

"Like a carpet that can tie a room together, sidewalks can tie a district together."
— David O'Connor, The Cecil Group

This is all part of a continuing effort that had its roots years ago with the Village Renaissance Committee that made an effort to beautify the village. Then about five years ago, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce became vocal about the need to spruce up village infrastructure. The chamber hosted a two-day "charette" during which residents brainstormed about what they would like to see. That led to the creation of the Village Revitalization Task Force, a town committee that is still in existence. All those efforts contributed to the evolution of the private-public partnership led by CRC whose mission is to help the town implement infrastructure improvements.

Greenbush right-of-way not addressed at Town Meeting

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For the second time in a month, town officials pulled an article off a special Town Meeting warrant asking residents to designate the Greenbush right-of-way as parkland.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said an improved "spirit of cooperation" between the MBTA and Cohasset caused selectmen to decide to remove the article. "We've agreed to seriously negotiate over the next 60 days," he continued, adding that if no agreement is reached by then, the article could find its way onto the spring annual Town Meeting.

After the meeting, Greenbush Mitigation Committee Chairman Thomas Gruber, who is involved in the discussions with the MBTA, said after months of treading water, a serious attempt to construct a mitigation agreement is underway.

"When this article originally appeared, we were not getting much attention, and nobody seemed to be paying any attention to anything we were interested in," he said. "This whole current effort shows the T really does want to get together and find a solution. I think we're on track at this point."

Earlier this summer, talks were

Property taxes are on the rise

Selectmen decide against split tax rate

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For Cohasset property owners, selectmen and the town assessor's office have some good and bad news.

The good news is that the board voted unanimously to lower the tax rate from $15.09 in Fiscal Year 2000, to $14.59 in Fiscal Year 2001.

The bad news is that property values have gone up so much over the past three years that some homeowners could see a significant increase in their tax bill.

"We're going to have some problems on our hands," said Selectman Michael Sullivan.

According to Deputy Assessor Cheryl Pooler, the town is entering into an assessment year. As called for under Proposition 2 1/2, all towns and cities must fully reassess property every three years in order to establish a state-certified tax rate. However, because the real estate market has been a "sellers' market," houses in Cohasset, especially along the water and other higher-end areas of town, could see their property values double or even triple in some cases, taking their tax bills with them.

But Chris Ford, of Hunneman Coldwell-Banker, said, though tripling is "too strong" a description of property values in towns, there have been some significant increases.

"There may have been some flukes where higher-end homes have experienced a greater rate of appreciation, but property across the board has gone up maybe 60 percent," he said. Ford looked at Fairoaks Lane as a "bell-whether." He said the average house has gone from $450,000 to $625,000 since the last assessment period.

Ford said the rise in property values is not inconsistent with what is being experienced on a state-wide level, though possibly "more pronounced" in Cohasset. "If values

'Déjà-vu all over again'

Presidential recount battle too familiar for some

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It was an election to replace a popular, if somewhat controversial, politician.

The initial vote count provided a winner, but because the difference was so small, both sides asked for a recount in certain, strategic districts.

The recount — that included Cohasset — tightened the gap, but the winner remained the same.

Problems arose with the punch-card ballots. Some holes weren't punched all the way through. Some had two marks on it.

The loser filed a lawsuit in Superior Court where a judge examined the numerous "blank" ballots.

This scenario sound familiar? It should because the South Shore lived though it four years ago when Democrats Bill Delahunt of Quincy and Phil Johnston of Marshfield faced off in the September primary to see who would win their party's nomination to replace outgoing U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds, D-Cohasset.

"His lawyers were on one side of the table, my lawyers were on the other. When there was a disputed ballot, the local registrar would make the call."
— Phil Johnston

"It's déjà vu all over again," Johnston said earlier this week as a Superior Court judge in Florida was deliberating Texas Gov. George W. Bush's request to stop a hand count of votes. "This was exactly the same issue that confronted us in our campaign. Delahunt and I were confronted with these same issues and same questions with the punch-card ballots."

Committee updates

Chip Muncey will resign from the water commission effective Jan. 1 because he is moving out of town. A new water commissioner will be named at the Dec. 19 selectmen's meeting, which will be held jointly with remaining water commissioners John McNabb and Robert Kasameyer. An election will then be held in the spring to fill the remainder of Muncey's term, which expires in 2002. Selectmen said anyone interested in the interim position should apply by Dec. 8.

The board voted to name Laurel Martinez of Lamberts Lane, and Doug and Celine Eymer of Bow Street to the town Arts Lottery Council.

Jim Dedes is the new chairman of the Cohasset Conservation Commission replacing Sue Cope. Deborah Cook will remain as vice-chairman.

Sunday openings

Selectmen voted to allow liquor stores to stay open on Christmas Eve, and New Year's Eve until 11 p.m. this year. The vote was needed because Dec. 24 and 31 fall on Sundays. State law says liquor stores can only be open on Sundays from Nov. 19 to Dec. 31, from 12 p.m. to 6 p.m., but a town can vote to extend the hours.

Brush chipping

Residential brush will be accepted at the DPW parking area Saturday, Nov. 18, from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. No trees more than 12 inches in diameter. No contractors.

Educator workshop

A Project Learning Tree Educators Workshop is offered Nov. 18 at Wompatuck State Park in Hingham from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. The cost is $15.

Project Learning Tree is for teachers and youth leaders who are looking for hands-on, inquiry-based, interdisciplinary activities to teach students about the environment. PLT was designed for easy integration pre-kindergarten-8 curricula and for use by teachers to supplement major areas of study. This workshop is an active, participatory venture into environmental education.

Take home the 96-Activity PLT Activity Guide. Space is limited.

Call Tim Rayworth at (978) 453-0592 or lowell heritage@state.ma.us.

Safe driving

In addition to all the ongoing programs, "55-Alive" is being offered Dec. 7 and 14 at the community center. It is a program sanctioned by AARP. Its focus is to make participants aware of what may have become bad driving habits. So many older drivers who limit themselves to just driving locally, and are reluctant to give that up, will have a renewed sense of confidence and ability. The speaker is Cal White from Plymouth. Videos and question and answer are part of the program. Call the office for details, 383-9112.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m.. The next selectmen's meeting is Nov. 28.

Send us e-mail

Cohasset Mariner editor Mary Ford can be reached by e-mail at mford@cnc.com or by telephone at 741-2933. Reporter Rick Collins can be reached at ricollins@cnc.com or by telephone at 741-2935. The Cohasset Mariner's fax number is 741-2931.

Pharmacy plan

The Council on Elder Affairs will feature a speaker to explain the state's new pharmacy plan, on Dec. 13 at 10 a.m. The speech, which will be held at the South Shore Community Center, is designed to provide information about the state-subsidized insurance plan, which allows seniors to pay a monthly premium based on yearly income and receive prescriptions at a discounted cost.

Senior flu clinic

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League will conduct a flu clinic for senior citizens age 65 and up from 10 a.m. to noon, Friday, Nov. 17 at Town Hall.

Seniors are asked to wear a short-sleeve shirt. The clinic is for Cohasset residents and is free of charge. For more information, call the Social Service League at 383-0771.

Hire a teen

The 2001 Cohasset Appalachia Service Project volunteers have redesigned their fund-raising program. All their former Thanksgiving pie and bread customers will need to make other plans for this year. These 60 teenagers are, however, quite willing and eager to help out with fall cleanups and odd jobs. Teen volunteers can be hired for a minimum donation of $10 per hour per volunteer (checks payable to "Cohasset ASP"). They will rake leaves, stack wood, paint, offer computer help, serve a holiday party, make a major dump-run, etc. There are a limited number of volunteers and time available, so first come, first served. They will offer their services as long as there are volunteers available. Contact ASP at 383-0345 or CohassetASP@dreamcom.net or fax request to 383-7005. Visit the web site at CohassetASP.org.

Former career diplomat opens Cohasset chapter

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

He no longer imagines what scenarios would result if Serbia invaded Bulgaria, or what would have to happen for the United States and Russia to exchange nuclear fire after a crisis in the Middle East.

Now he calculates the wind on his approach to the 16th green at Cohasset Golf Club, or how to wrap up the final chapter of his latest book.

After more than 50 years of public service as either a member of the US State Department, National Security Council or as a teacher at MIT — Lincoln Bloomfield is settling into the quieter life he enjoys as a Cohasset resident.

But don't ask him how retirement is; Bloomfield prefers to call his current state "a new chapter" of his storied life.

"The way I have pretty much lived is a series of chapters," said Bloomfield, now 80, in his Beach Street home. "When the page turns, I very happily move on. That's why I've switched careers from time to time."

Bloomfield is now entering the "freedom" chapter of his life. Instead of working with George Schultz or butting heads with John Foster Dulles, "Linc" as he is normally called, can be found banging out his latest essay on his computer in a room overlooking Little Harbor. You might also find him playing golf with his wife Iri or on the tennis court at the Cohasset Tennis & Squash Club.

"The great thing about it is I can go out and play golf and tennis when the mood stirs, and still get my work done," he said.

According to Bloomfield, this past year has been the first year he has spent the majority of his time "enjoying beautiful Cohasset."

Though his time here has been split up with lecture junkets to Geneva, Moscow, Saudi Arabia and dozens of other countries around the world, and a year-long stint as Jimmy Carter's Director of Global Issues in the National Security Council in Washington D.C., Bloomfield has had a house in Cohasset for almost 50 years. He first came to town in 1954 on a leave of absence from the State Department, when he went to Harvard for a — in his words — "quick" doctorate. "It was the quickest one in the history of Harvard," he said, half seriously. Though he left and went back to Washington, he was already hooked on this small town. "I fell in love with Cohasset completely," he said. "I bought a little house here I thought it would be swell to come back to."

In 1957, Bloomfield purchased his current home, after quitting the State Department, and taking a three-year appointment to MIT's Center for International Studies.

At this point, international studies and governmental service were as familiar to him as the trip up Beach Street to the First Parish Church, where he has been a member since 1954.

After graduating from Harvard with a degree in Government, he was put in charge of Oregon's Federal School Lunch and Food Stamp Program at the ripe old age of 21. When World War II called him away, he served as a naval officer and then in the Office of Strategic Services — the wartime precursor of the CIA. He then followed an OSS boss to the State Department where he helped organize the creation of the United Nations in New York City, and then served as an analyst looking at the United States' role in the U.N. It was during his time as a U.N. diplomat that his eyes fell upon one of the representatives from New Zealand. That woman, Irirangi Coates, was the daughter of the first native-born prime minister of New Zealand, and after months of a weekend courtship, she became Mrs. Lincoln Bloomfield.

Back in Washington, Bloomfield remained in the State Department when new President Dwight Eisenhower brought Dulles in as Secretary of State. It was the age of the Marshall and Truman Plans and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill's "Iron Curtain" speech. Dulles wanted his name known also. Bloomfield gave him an analysis of the US's interests in the U.N. but had to say. "Suddenly I had an urge to do a lot of writing. For years it had been all blocked up," he said.

Bloomfield was able to point to a shelf full of his books on foreign policy, international relations and conflict management strategies. A bibliography list put together by MIT in 1992 listed more than 60 articles written since 1971, published in journals such as World Magazine, Foreign Service Journal, Christian Science Monitor, New York Times, Boston Globe and Newsweek.

He currently is finishing up one of his most challenging projects, his memoirs. He said he's very excited about it but is stuck on the final chapter.

War games

In 1991, Bloomfield relinquished his full-time faculty position at MIT. But he hasn't fully cut his ties with the institution. He remains involved with the school's Arms Control Project. He also used the school's technology and research focus to create a computer program now being used by the office, force the participants into a deeper understanding of foreign political opponents.

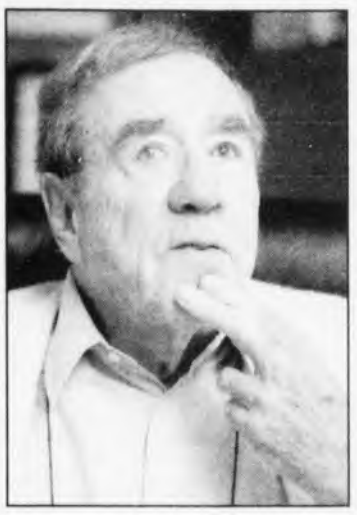
"It's a teaching device, a research device, a foreign policy device," explained Bloomfield. "It's role-playing foreign policy strategies."

Bloomfield said Russian officials claim he ran the first "political game" in Moscow in 1970, when the United States and USSR were locked in the Cold War.

"I did it as part of the U.S. Institute," he said proudly. "It forced the Russians to put themselves in our shoes. One of the game's players was the son of Andrei Gromyko and he was as tough on the Russians as anyone."

It was mostly as a gaming director that Bloomfield entered the consultant chapter of his life.

"In the mid-80's Schultz decided the State Department should have its own gaming capabilities, and they're still running those games," he said. "It's a good way to play a hand of 'What if?'" Bloomfield said he stayed involved in running those games until this past year.



"When the page turns, I very happily move on. That's why I've switched careers from time to time."

"Suddenly I had an urge to do a lot of writing. For years it had been all blocked up."

"One of the game's players was the son of Andrei Gromyko and he was as tough on the Russians as anyone."

Dulles turned it down in favor of a more "gimmicky" speech. Bloomfield's analysis would first become a magazine article after he left the State Department, and later, he turned it into one of the most well-received books on international relations, called "The United Nations and US Foreign Policy – A New Look at the National Interest."

Bloomfield said he became an author on the advice of future Secretary of State Dean Rusk. "He told me to write articles for magazines, so I wrote one for a magazine that I knew all state department officials read, Foreign Affairs," he said. It was then that Dulles showed interest in what Bloomfield State Department and foreign service officials worldwide, called CASCON – Computer Aided System for Analyzing Conflict. The program features details about numerous world-wide conflicts, such as the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the Balkan Wars, and Somalia. If a new conflict sprung up, a person could enter in the details of the conflict and pull up information about similar conflicts and see how often and why those conflicts end in war. He has also created, with the assistance of MIT, a series of role-playing "war games." These games, which have been used by the U.S. State Department since Ronald Reagan was in

His last official foray as a public servant came in the spring of 1979 when President Carter tapped him to become the National Security Council's Director of Global Issues. "That was kind of an exacting year," Bloomfield understated. Fifty-three Americans had already been taken hostage in Iran, and Bloomfield soon found himself trying to stem the flood of Southeast Asian "boat people" to the United States.

"It was just a human catastrophe," he said.

A more cheerful chapter began in 1989 when he started hosting duties of the short-lived Monitor Channel's "50 Years Ago Today" television show. Bloomfield read newspaper headlines from 50 years ago, and conducted discussions on past world events. Apparently Bloomfield had a face and mind for television as the show picked up a Boston Emmy Award in 1992. He also was a consultant for the HBO's 1984 made-for-TV nuclear conflict movie "Countdown to Looking Glass" which won a Cable ACE award in 1985.

Though he no longer racks up frequent-flyer miles between Boston and Washington, he continues to have an impact. A framed picture and letter of current Secretary of State Madeleine Albright adorns his "ego wall," along with signed pictures of Carter, Rusk and Elliot Richardson. Albright wrote Bloomfield after he published a piece called "Competing 21st Century Threats: Scenarios and Realities," and called the article "very helpful." Bloomfield said he heard a part of the article in a speech President Clinton gave a few months later in San Francisco.

He said he is still able to put his "nickel in the pot" though now in the comfort of his own home – and sometimes his pajamas. "Last January, after watching some of news and so on, I sat here in my pajamas and banged out an op-ed piece, and I faxed it to the Globe, and they published it," he said.

Local issues

He recently put his two cents into more local issues. Bloomfield is one of the more staunch pro-Greenbush advocates in town, and along with a half-dozen other residents, sent a letter to selectmen urging the town not to demand a "blank check" from the MBTA in its mitigation negotiations.

"Local politics has always interested me very much, but I had make choices and was very involved until this year in lot of out of town activity, between consulting in the State Department and preparing games and speaking tours," Bloomfield explained. "It really was a matter of choosing. I'm not saying I'm not interested…but I didn't have the time or piece of agenda that I could contribute to town committees and that sort of thing."

Instead his involvement has been regulated mainly to the First Parish Church, when he can be heard singing in the church choir every Sunday.

But now Bloomfield is taking advantage of his ability to say "no" and do whatever he wants.

"I've said no to a variety of things because I like this chapter [of my life]," he said. "I think it's a good chapter. I wouldn't call it retirement, I'd call it a very different change of pace."

Bloomfield will soon speak as part of a 500-person lecture series at Salem's Hamilton Hall called "Rethinking National Security." More information of the CASCON foreign policy research tool is available at http://www.mit.edu/cascon

This week in COHASSET

Committee updates

Chip Muncey will resign from the water commission effective Jan. 1 because he is moving out of town. A new water commissioner will be named at the Dec. 19 selectmen's meeting, which will be held jointly with remaining water commissioners John McNabb and Robert Kasameyer. An election will then be held in the spring to fill the remainder of Muncey's term, which expires in 2002. Selectmen said anyone interested in the interim position should apply by Dec. 8.

The board voted to name Laurel Martinez of Lamberts Lane, and Doug and Celine Eymer of Bow Street to the town Arts Lottery Council.

Jim Dedes is the new chairman of the Cohasset Conservation Commission replacing Sue Cope. Deborah Cook will remain as vice-chairman.

Sunday openings

Selectmen voted to allow liquor stores to stay open on Christmas Eve, and New Year's Eve until 11 p.m. this year. The vote was needed because Dec. 24 and 31 fall on Sundays. State law says liquor stores can only be open on Sundays from Nov. 19 to Dec. 31, from 12 p.m. to 6 p.m., but a town can vote to extend the hours.

Brush chipping

Residential brush will be accepted at the DPW parking area Saturday, Nov. 18, from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. No trees more than 12 inches in diameter. No contractors.

Educator workshop

A Project Learning Tree Educators Workshop is offered Nov. 18 at Wompatuck State Park in Hingham from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. The cost is $15.

Project Learning Tree is for teachers and youth leaders who are looking for hands-on, inquiry-based, interdisciplinary activities to teach students about the environment. PLT was designed for easy integration pre-kindergarten-8 curricula and for use by teachers to supplement major areas of study. This workshop is an active, participatory venture into environmental education.

Take home the 96-Activity PLT Activity Guide. Space is limited.

Call Tim Rayworth at (978) 453-0592 or lowell heritage@state.ma.us.

Safe driving

In addition to all the ongoing programs, "55-Alive" is being offered Dec. 7 and 14 at the community center. It is a program sanctioned by AARP. Its focus is to make participants aware of what may have become bad driving habits. So many older drivers who limit themselves to just driving locally, and are reluctant to give that up, will have a renewed sense of confidence and ability. The speaker is Cal White from Plymouth. Videos and question and answer are part of the program. Call the office for details, 383-9112.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m.. The next selectmen's meeting is Nov. 28.

Pharmacy plan

The Council on Elder Affairs will feature a speaker to explain the state's new pharmacy plan, on Dec. 13 at 10 a.m. The speech, which will be held at the South Shore Community Center, is designed to provide information about the state-subsidized insurance plan, which allows seniors to pay a monthly premium based on yearly income and receive prescriptions at a discounted cost.

Senior flu clinic

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League will conduct a flu clinic for senior citizens age 65 and up from 10 a.m. to noon, Friday, Nov. 17 at Town Hall.

Seniors are asked to wear a short-sleeve shirt. The clinic is for Cohasset residents and is free of charge. For more information, call the Social Service League at 383-0771.

Hire a teen

The 2001 Cohasset Appalachia Service Project volunteers have redesigned their fund-raising program. All their former Thanksgiving pie and bread customers will need to make other plans for this year. These 60 teenagers are, however, quite willing and eager to help out with fall cleanups and odd jobs. Teen volunteers can be hired for a minimum donation of $10 per hour per volunteer (checks payable to "Cohasset ASP"). They will rake leaves, stack wood, paint, offer computer help, serve a holiday party, make a major dump-run, etc. There are a limited number of volunteers and time available, so first come, first served. They will offer their services as long as there are volunteers available. Contact ASP at 383-0345 or CohassetASP@dreamcom.net or fax request to 383-7005. Visit the web site at CohassetASP.org.

Former career diplomat opens Cohasset chapter

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

He no longer imagines what scenarios would result if Serbia invaded Bulgaria, or what would have to happen for the United States and Russia to exchange nuclear fire after a crisis in the Middle East.

Now he calculates the wind on his approach to the 16th green at Cohasset Golf Club, or how to wrap up the final chapter of his latest book.

After more than 50 years of public service as either a member of the US State Department, National Security Council or as a teacher at MIT — Lincoln Bloomfield is settling into the quieter life he enjoys as a Cohasset resident.

But don't ask him how retirement is; Bloomfield prefers to call his current state "a new chapter" of his storied life.

"The way I have pretty much lived is a series of chapters," said Bloomfield, now 80, in his Beach Street home. "When the page turns, I very happily move on. That's why I've switched careers from time to time."

Bloomfield is now entering the "freedom" chapter of his life. Instead of working with George Schultz or butting heads with John Foster Dulles, "Linc" as he is normally called, can be found banging out his latest essay on his computer in a room overlooking Little Harbor. You might also find him playing golf with his wife Iri or on the tennis court at the Cohasset Tennis & Squash Club.

"The great thing about it is I can go out and play golf and tennis when the mood stirs, and still get my work done," he said.

According to Bloomfield, this past year has been the first year he has spent the majority of his time "enjoying beautiful Cohasset."

Though his time here has been split up with lecture junkets to Geneva, Moscow, Saudi Arabia and dozens of other countries around the world, and a year-long stint as Jimmy Carter's Director of Global Issues in the National Security Council in Washington D.C., Bloomfield has had a house in Cohasset for almost 50 years. He first came to town in 1954 on a leave of absence from the State Department, when he went to Harvard for a — in his words — "quick" doctorate. "It was the quickest one in the history of Harvard," he said, half seriously. Though he left and went back to Washington, he was already hooked on this small town. "I fell in love with Cohasset completely," he said. "I bought a little house here I thought it would be swell to come back to."

In 1957, Bloomfield purchased his current home, after quitting the State Department, and taking a three-year appointment to MIT's Center for International Studies.

At this point, international studies and governmental service were as familiar to him as the trip up Beach Street to the First Parish Church, where he has been a member since 1954.

After graduating from Harvard with a degree in Government, he was put in charge of Oregon's Federal School Lunch and Food Stamp Program at the ripe old age of 21. When World War II called him away, he served as a naval officer and then in the Office of Strategic Services — the wartime precursor of the CIA. He then followed an OSS boss to the State Department where he helped organize the creation of the United Nations in New York City, and then served as an analyst looking at the United States' role in the U.N. It was during his time as a U.N. diplomat that his eyes fell upon one of the representatives from New Zealand. That woman, Irirangi Coates, was the daughter of the first native-born prime minister of New Zealand, and after months of a weekend courtship, she became Mrs. Lincoln Bloomfield.

Back in Washington, Bloomfield remained in the State Department when new President Dwight Eisenhower brought Dulles in as Secretary of State. It was the age of the Marshall and Truman Plans and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill's "Iron Curtain" speech. Dulles wanted his name known also. Bloomfield gave him an analysis of the US's interests in the U.N. but had to say, "Suddenly I had an urge to do a lot of writing. For years it had been all blocked up," he said.

Bloomfield was able to point to a shelf full of his books on foreign policy, international relations and conflict management strategies. A bibliography list put together by MIT in 1992 listed more than 60 articles written since 1971, published in journals such as World Magazine, Foreign Service Journal, Christian Science Monitor, New York Times, Boston Globe and Newsweek.

He currently is finishing up one of his most challenging projects, his memoirs. He said he's very excited about it but is stuck on the final chapter.

War games

In 1991, Bloomfield relinquished his full-time faculty position at MIT. But he hasn't fully cut his ties with the institution. He remains involved with the school's Arms Control Project. He also used the school's technology and research focus to create a computer program now being used by the State Department and foreign service officials worldwide, called CASCON — Computer Aided System for Analyzing Conflict. The program features details about numerous world-wide conflicts, such as the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the Balkan Wars, and Somalia. If a new conflict sprung up, a person could enter in the details of the conflict and pull up information about similar conflicts and see how often and why those conflicts end in war. He has also created, with the assistance of MIT, a series of role-playing "war games." These games, which have been used by the U.S. State Department since Ronald Reagan was in office, force the participants into a deeper understanding of foreign political opponents.

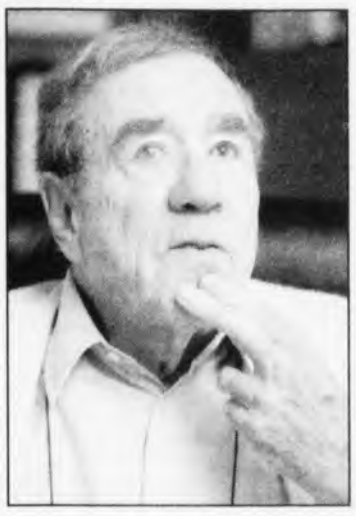
"It's a teaching device, a research device, a foreign policy device," explained Bloomfield. "It's role-playing foreign policy strategies."

Bloomfield said Russian officials claim he ran the first "political game" in Moscow in 1970, when the United States and USSR were locked in the Cold War.

"I did it as part of the U.S. Institute," he said proudly. "It forced the Russians to put themselves in our shoes. One of the game's players was the son of Andrei Gromyko and he was as tough on the Russians as anyone."

It was mostly as a gaming director that Bloomfield entered the consultant chapter of his life.

"In the mid-80's Schultz decided the State Department should have its own gaming capabilities, and they're still running those games," he said. "It's a good way to play a hand of 'What if?'" Bloomfield said he stayed involved in running those games until this past year.



"When the page turns, I very happily move on. That's why I've switched careers from time to time."

"Suddenly I had an urge to do a lot of writing. For years it had been all blocked up."

"One of the game's players was the son of Andrei Gromyko and he was as tough on the Russians as anyone."

His last official foray as a public servant came in the spring of 1979 when President Carter tapped him to become the National Security Council's Director of Global Issues. "That was kind of an exacting year," Bloomfield understated. Fifty-three Americans had already been taken hostage in Iran, and Bloomfield soon found himself trying to stem the flood of Southeast Asian "boat people" to the United States.

"It was just a human catastrophe," he said.

A more cheerful chapter began in 1989 when he started hosting duties of the short-lived Monitor Channel's "50 Years Ago Today" television show. Bloomfield read newspaper headlines from 50 years ago, and conducted discussions on past world events. Apparently Bloomfield had a face and mind for television as the show picked up a Boston Emmy Award in 1992. He also was a consultant for the HBO's 1984 made-for-TV nuclear conflict movie "Countdown to Looking Glass" which won a Cable ACE award in 1985.

Though he no longer racks up frequent-flyer miles between Boston and Washington, he continues to have an impact. A framed picture and letter of current Secretary of State Madeleine Albright adorns his "ego wall," along with signed pictures of Carter, Rusk and Elliot Richardson. Albright wrote Bloomfield after he published a piece called "Competing 21st Century Threats: Scenarios and Realities," and called the article "very helpful." Bloomfield said he heard a part of the article in a speech President Clinton gave a few months later in San Francisco.

He said he is still able to put his "nickel in the pot" though now in the comfort of his own home – and sometimes his pajamas. "Last January, after watching some of news and so on, I sat here in my pajamas and banged out an op-ed piece, and I faxed it to the Globe, and they published it," he said.

Local issues

He recently put his two cents into more local issues. Bloomfield is one of the more staunch pro-Greenbush advocates in town, and along with a half-dozen other residents, sent a letter to selectmen urging the town not to demand a "blank check" from the MBTA in its mitigation negotiations.

"Local politics has always interested me very much, but I had make choices and was very involved until this year in lot of out of town activity, between consulting in the State Department and preparing games and speaking tours," Bloomfield explained. "It really was a matter of choosing. I'm not saying I'm not interested...but I didn't have the time or piece of agenda that I could contribute to town committees and that sort of thing."

Instead his involvement has been regulated mainly to the First Parish Church, when he can be heard singing in the church choir every Sunday.

But now Bloomfield is taking advantage of his ability to say "no" and do whatever he wants.

"I've said no to a variety of things because I like this chapter [of my life]," he said "I think it's a good chapter. I wouldn't call it retirement, I'd call it a very different change of pace."

Bloomfield will soon speak as part of a 500-person lecture series at Salem's Hamilton Hall called "Rethinking National Security." More information of the CASCON foreign policy research tool is available at http://www.mit.edu/cascon

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

THANKFUL THOUGHTS

Hello, Cohasset. I hope that this week brings the feeling of late fall and the approaching holiday season to all of you. As we head into this busy season, take some time to give thanks to those around you: family, friends and anyone who you come across every day. Also, maybe by this time next week, we will have a new President, certainly something to be thankful for!

SOCCER STAR

Trinity College in Hartford, Conn. has some great news to report from the Sports Department. Morgan Sandell, a sophomore at the school, was named to the 2000 All-New England Small College Athletic Conference(NESCAC) First Team. Trinity posted a 5-6-3 overall record and a 2-6-1 mark in the NESCAC. Morgan, who started 12 of 14 games as a forward, led the Bantams in scoring with five goals and one assist for 11 points. He scored the game-winning goal in victories over Salve Regina University and Eastern Connecticut State University and has scored the game-winner in five games over the past two seasons. Fantastic playing, Morgan!

GRIDIRON CLUB AUCTION

I got some news from the Cohasset Gridiron Club. The Cohasset Gridiron Club's third Annual Fundraising Auction is planned for this Saturday night, Nov. 18th, from 7-11 p.m. at the American Legion, George H. Mealy Post on Summer Street. There will be live and silent auctions, raffles, light snacks and beverages. Gift baskets, event tickets, dining certificates and services are among the many items to bid on. Everyone is invited to "catch the spirit" and join the fun!

TREE LIGHTING

Here Yea, Here Yea! The South Shore Community Center, Rusty Skippers Marching Band and First Parish of Cohasset invite you all to a Community Tree-Lighting and Carol Sing-Along on Sunday, Nov. 26 at 3 p.m.

Members of the Rusty Skippers have once again dusted off their instruments and have been practicing their selections of Christmas and Holiday music. At 3 p.m., the band invites you to sing along around the town Christmas tree while the band plays. At dusk, the tree will be lit for the season. Immediately following the tree-lighting, all are invited for cocoa and goodies at the Parish House of First Parish (23 North Main St.). In the event of truly inclement weather, the Skippers will play inside the Parish House. Your donations of a non-perishable food item for the Cohasset Food Pantry would be appreciated. The Rusty Skippers will also be playing at noon on Saturday, Dec. 2 at the Village Fair inside the Meeting House on the Common. See you there! What a great way for all of us to start the holiday season, maybe this would be the start of your child learning about giving and having them help select an item for the Food Pantry. Hope to see you there!

SENIOR FLU CLINIC

We have a Senior Flu Clinic coming soon to Cohasset. The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League will conduct a flu clinic for senior citizens age 65 and up from 10 am to noon, Friday, Nov 17 at Town Hall. Seniors are asked to wear a short-sleeved shirt. The clinic is for Cohasset Residents residents and is free of charge. For more information, call the Social Service League at 383-0771.

BRIDGE, TRIPS FOR SENIORS

Are there any Seniors out there interested in playing some bridge? Come and play on Wednesdays at the Cohasset Senior Center. This program is for Intermediate Level Players who will play 16 hands. Refreshments will be served, plan to arrive at 12:45 and play will begin at 1 p.m..

Two other dates that you should keep in mind. Wednesday, Dec. 13, a trip to the Isabella Stewart Gardener Museum is being planned. What a wonderful trip. Please call to hold a space at 383-9112. Christmas at the Pops is coming up on Dec. 9. Please call to let us know you are coming at 383-9112. There is a SS-Alive Mature Driving class on two Thursdays, Dec. 7 and 14 at 9:30 am to 12:30 p.m. The class stops for lunch and finishes at 2 p.m. All participants are required to prepay a $10 donation, people 80 and over or if you are from the Veterans Dept. you are free. Their is a Keep Well clinic being held on Friday, Nov 17 from 10-12 am at the Harborview Housing at 60 Elm St., sponsored by the Board of Health.

SWARTHMORE SOCCER

Jacqueline Kahn, who is a CHS graduate of 2000, just finished her freshman soccer season at Swarthmore College, in Swarthmore, Penn. With three goals and several assists, Jackie wound up as the second highest scorer for the Garnet University women's team, who compete in the Centennial Conference. An all-star in both soccer and lacrosse for the Skippers, Jackie was recruited to play lacrosse at Swarthmore and invited to try out for the soccer team. She wound up as one of their two starting forwards and is expected to see plenty of playing time in the spring too, when lacrosse season begins. Great job Jackie! I am sure we will be hearing more about this talented young lady.

CLOTHING DROP OFF

If anyone out there has any coats, jackets, quilts or blankets that you would like to donate, The Osgood School has a drop-off for these items in the front hall of the school. It is a great way to clean out unwanted or needed items and will go to keeping someone very warm!

That is all the news for this week! Please keep sending all of the wonderful news my way! You can get it to me by email at jenpiep@yahoo.com, regular mail at 622 CJC Highway or phone it in at 923-1057. Have a great week! — Jennifer Piepenbrink

Project makes shopping at the dump a dream

Eagle Scout heads up building of new boutique

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Thanks to a local Eagle Scout candidate, it's going to be a lot more pleasant to shop at "the boutique" from now on.

Andrew Dennis, 17, a Cohasset High School senior, provided the leadership behind the construction of a new building at the town Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF) off Cedar Street so residents could have a larger, better organized place to make a "find." The structure replaces the old boutique, which was built by an Eagle Scout in 1986. The old boutique building will now be used entirely as a drop off for returnable bottles and cans collected by the Boy Scouts.

Andrew got the idea for his Eagle project when he volunteered at the returnables building and saw how cramped the boutique side of the structure was. The boutique is a place where residents can "take it or leave it" including everything from books to computer equipment.

About two dozen people, including scouts and town officials, were on hand Saturday morning for the grand opening of the new boutique, that is even equipped with a sign, "The Boutique — Treasures for the Taking" donated by David Hassan. The construction of the wood-frame 10x20-foot structure took upwards of 200 hours and involved coordinating a small army of scouts, friends and family members to pitch in.

"It took a bunch of people to do the work," said Howie Motenko, who serves on the Troop 28 committee and acted as an adviser to the project. To qualify as an Eagle Scout project, the work must last at least five years and involve a number of other people, he explained.

"The scout acts more as a coordinator," he said.

Andrew said while construction was hard, his biggest challenge was raising the money and getting the materials. He thanked all those who helped including his mother for "keeping me on track" and his father for being "construction consultant." In addition to Hassan, Andrew thanked Cohasset Collision, Cohasset Hardware, Joseph's Hardware, the Cohasset Rotary Club, Cohasset Imports, Hingham Lumber and the residents for their donations.

"Andrew took the challenge and grew from it and that's great to see."
— Howie Motenko, Troop 28

To reach Eagle Scout status – the highest rank a Boy Scout can achieve – the scout must complete 21 merit badges, an Eagle project approved by the area Boy Scout council, and a workbook detailing the scout's project. All requirements must be completed by the time he reaches 18. Only one in 50 boys, who enter scouting, attain Eagle rank.

"The book is like a college résumé, it's so important," said scoutmaster Phil Lehr about the Eagle Scout Project Workbook. "It contains all the scout's records, letters of recommendations, plus pictures and details of the project itself."

Once the book is complete, it is reviewed by the Eagle board of review at the local Boy Scout Council and sent on to the national council in Texas for final approval. Once the national council gives the okay, the scout has qualified for Eagle rank, which is bestowed at a court of honor that, in Andrew's case, will likely occur this spring.

"Then he gets a party," quipped Andrew's mother, Kathy Dennis.

Lehr said because of what the scout goes through to attain the honor, reaching the rank of Eagle is still held in high regard, although scouting may not be as popular today as in years past.

"From an employer's standpoint, anyone who sees Eagle Scout on a résumé that comes across his desk is likely to take that over others," he said. Lehr explained that the leadership involved in attaining Eagle rank helps make a scout a more rounded person, capable of doing more than others his age would be capable of.

Motenko praised Andrew's months of hard work to see the project through to fruition.

"Andrew took the challenge and grew from it and that's great to see," he said.

Andrew, who is undecided about his college plans, said finishing touches still to be added to the boutique include signs indicating where electronic devices, books, games and sporting equipment should be placed. He had to obtain approval from the town manager, troop committee and regional Boy Scout council before moving forward with the project.

In its 80 year history, Troop 28 has had nearly 80 members become Eagle Scouts. Four members of Boy Scout Troop 28 in Cohasset are currently nearing completion of requirements for their Eagle Scout badges. In addition to Andrew Dennis, other Eagle Scout candidates include:- Kenneth Portanova, Will McArthur and Alex Schmidt.

SandCastles ChildCare earns recognition

SandCastles ChildCare & Preschool was recently granted accreditation by the National Association for the Education of Young Children . This prestigious recognition has been achieved by only 7 percent of early childhood programs nationwide. Owners Anne Sexton and Lynn Durkin to commend their staff for their untiring efforts during the accreditation process and for their continuing dedication to the children and families of SandCastles.

NAEYC accreditation is a rigorous voluntary process by which early childhood programs demonstrate that they meet national standards of excellence. The NAEYC accreditation focuses on the child's experience. The process carefully considers all aspects of a program including health and safety, staffing, staffing qualifications, and physical environment. The emphasis is on the children's relationships with the staff and how the program helps each child grow and learn intellectually, physically, socially and emotionally.

"These are the critical areas for children's success in school as well as in life," said director and co-owner Anne Sexton.

SandCastles ChildCare & Preschool is conveniently located at 152 King St., Cohasset and serves children ranging from 8 weeks to 6 years. For more information about the programs at SandCastles, call Sexton at (781)383-6789.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Soaring with Eagles

The inclement weather Saturday couldn't put a damper on a very important dedication — the new boutique building at the RTF.

Thanks to Eagle Scout candidate Andrew Dennis — residents looking to "take it or leave it" will be able to do so in organized comfort in the spiffy, new 20x10 foot structure.

About two dozen scouts, family members and friends gathered for the grand opening of "The Boutique —Treasures for the Taking," a project that took upwards of 200 hours and a small army of volunteers to complete.

Cohasset is no stranger to Eagle Scouts and their projects. According to scout leaders, Troop 28 has launched nearly 80 Eagle Scouts in its 80 years of existence, that's an average of one per year. There are four boys in the troop currently pursuing Eagle Scout status.

Not only does the community benefit from projects — like the new boutique building — but it is also enriched by the young men who develop into leaders. The scouts must complete 21 merit badges on their way to Eagle, the highest rank a Boy Scout can achieve.

As scoutmaster Phil Lehr explained not only does "Eagle Scout" go a long way on a résumé but it can put the young men, who earn it, ahead of their peers in many ways.

Saturday's event was also a family affair. Andrew's mother Kathy Dennis snapped photographs as his father, Robert — also an Eagle Scout — couldn't stop smiling.

Scouting may not be as popular as it once was, but it is alive and well in Cohasset thanks to a dedicated group of enthusiastic troop leaders who motivate local scouts.

Punch-card voting

One positive that will no doubt come out of the presidential election is the demise of punch-card voting machines.

Those here on the South Shore may remember the Phil Johnston/Bill Delahunt Democratic Party primary in 1996 that ended with a judge examining the ballots to determine whether "hanging" or "pregnant chads" constitute votes.

Not only are the optical scanners more accurate but they are also much faster. On the evening of Nov. 7, Town Clerk Marion Douglas, her staff and election workers had the unofficial votes tabulated by 8:30 p.m., just 30 minutes after the polls closed. The official results including write-ins were ready about an hour later.

Of course nothing is perfect. About eight years ago, Hingham changed to the optical scanners. But the first time out, then Town Clerk Thomas Hall bought the wrong felt pens. The ink reflected so the scanners couldn't count the ballots necessitating a hand-count.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Nov. 2 editorial

TO THE EDITOR:

I wish to take strong exception to the Nov. 2 Mariner editorial favoring Cantwell for state senator.

As the last Republican to hold this Senate seat, prior to Sen. Hedlund, I feel I have a unique vantage point from which to view this Senatorial district. While I have not always agreed with the senator, I feel he has worked hard and represented this district effectively. You have given him very little credit for what he has accomplished. Moreover, in your Nov. 2 issue, when you were editorializing in favor of Cantwell, there appeared a lengthy article about a major funding program to benefit the South Shore, passed by the Legislature with significant support from Sen. Hedlund.

The principal reason cited for your support of Mr. Cantwell was that by his connection to the "Democratic machine" and as a member of the majority party, he could somehow do more for the district and the South Shore. That is a very poor reason indeed for your support, and illustrates your lack of understanding of the qualities one needs to serve a constituency well.

In my view, there is a far more important reason to support Sen. Hedlund and other capable Republicans like him, and that is the sad state of the two-party system in the state Legislature. There is today only a tiny Republican presence in both branches of the Legislature, with not even enough minority members to demand roll calls on key issues or to sustain gubernatorial vetoes. Furthermore, there is little if any accountability for the actions of the Legislative majority, which in essence, has brought us close to a one-party tyranny on Beacon Hill.

The Republican organization and Republican office-holders in this state must bear a major responsibility for this tragic state of affairs.

This situation urgently calls for the election to the Legislature of more, not fewer, minority party members who, like Sen. Hedlund, can ably represent their constituencies, and work to rebuild the two-party system on Beacon Hill.

I am delighted with Sen. Hedlund's impressive victory in the Nov. 7 election, and feel that the Mariner did him and the need for a strong minority presence in the Legislature a major disservice with your Nov. 2 editorial.

Halloween fair

TO THE EDITOR:

For nearly 25 years, the Halloween Fair on the Common has been both a fall tradition and the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's single largest fund-raiser. Once again it was a delight to see the children in their costumes, their parents in tow, eager to participate in the activities and games. And, as in previous years, it was equally wonderful to sense the feeling of community that the fair creates as families and friends meet and mingle.

Although the cold, blustery day forced us indoors, the excitement could not be contained within the community center and spilled out onto the village streets for all to share.

On behalf of the staff of the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, I'd like to thank the small army of people who banded together to make our fair a reality. With each year the fair grows and becomes more successful because of the efforts of these volunteers. I remain overwhelmed by the support and generosity of businesses, parents, students and friends. Many, many thanks are due to Arlene and Bob Fiori of Fiori's Exxon Station, Dan Belz of Atlantic Bagel, Mike Feroli of The Village Butcher & Deli, Denise and Gary Bismore of The Silver Spoon and The Super Stop & Shop for their generous donations.

We also owe much to the students of the Deer Hill, middle school and high school, who, through their affiliation with community service, student council, churches, scouting and the pure goodness of their hearts, volunteered to staff the multitude of activities and games. To the 57 of you…Thank you!

And finally, a thank you to our nursery school parent volunteers, all 63 of you, for your time and tireless energy on behalf of the school, and to the families who each year make the Halloween Fair on the Common a part of their Halloween celebration. The funds and fun raised through this effort do much to help raise our community's children.

Revitalization

TO THE EDITOR:

We have attended the public meetings held by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation and wish to offer some thoughts based on comments made at those meetings and elsewhere. Many people in Cohasset like the town the way it is. They chose to live here for its great natural beauty, its historic legacy and its quiet, small-town character. Creating a harborwalk, designing multitextured sidewalks and crosswalks, narrowing Elm Street and altering traffic patterns are not priorities for most people. What we would like to see is the preservation of open space around the harbor for the enjoyment of residents and simple improvement of some streets and sidewalks.

Building a small playground and park on the lot at the corner of Stockbridge Street across from the harbor is a good idea. We hope that Peter Roy, who owns the lot and is a major "stakeholder" in the CRC, will donate to the town this last remaining parcel of open land facing the harbor. Back in1961 the Benjamin Plan, a master plan for the town, recommended making the entire area around the west end of the cove into a park. Kimball's Motel was built there instead, blocking the view from Elm Street to the harbor. Perhaps Mr. Roy, the current owner, can find a creative way to restore visual access to the harbor when he remodels the motel.

Downtown Cohasset clearly needs new sidewalks, but not fancy ones. The removal of utility poles and their replacement with trees would also be desirable. A pebble-textured concrete pavement or simply new asphalt would improve the appearance of the walks. A problem is the gradual disappearance of granite curbing during the years as the street is repaved. Perhaps in the future the town can scrape off the old asphalt before installing a new layer. Although we want some modification, we do not want Cohasset village to be transformed into another Nantucket, with prettified "streetscapes," trendy boutiques, expensive restaurants and busloads of tourists. What residents like about Cohasset is its slightly out-of-the-way location, which keeps tourism down. The village and harbor may be a little rough around the edges, but this is Cohasset, not Nantucket.

A priority for any planning should be the convenience of the residents. This means not blocking access around the corner of Elm and Margin streets by expanding the island there on one side. If some commuters from Scituate speed around the corner, our police can monitor the traffic and fine violators. Making certain streets one-way is also not a practical idea. We need to make it easy for residents to get around, to reach the shops, and to park close by. It would make sense, however, to put in an island at the juncture of Summer and Border streets to improve the traffic pattern at that large intersection. Another problem area is the intersection of Depot Court, Pleasant Street and Ripley Road. A visual island, perhaps accomplished by paving the street with a cobblestone triangle, would help to direct the traffic and still allow large vehicles to drive over it if necessary.

The entrance to the town parking lot at that intersection also needs to be improved and more parking spaces made available. It would be desirable, however, to expose the interesting, historic and well-preserved engine turntable that lies hidden under the pavement of the lot. It dates from 1849, when Cohasset was the terminus of the then new Old Colony Railroad. Another hidden treasure is the dramatic granite cliff behind Hub Shipping on Elm Street, a natural formation now covered by scrub growth which could be removed to reveal the ledge. Also unique to Cohasset is the picturesque but decrepit Mill River boathouse, recently purchased by Peter Roy. Restoring this landmark would be a boon to Cohasset. Finally, the townspeople could enjoy spectacular views of the harbor from the top of Beacon Rock on Government Island if, as Herb Jason suggests, an easy-access trail were created up the rock face.

We feel that preserving the natural and historic legacy of Cohasset should be the priority of town planners. We would like to see a shift in the focus of the town in that direction. We and many others would also like to see our selectmen reclaim their leadership role in setting policy for change in the town. They are our elected representatives. It is their responsibility, not that of a few self-appointed individuals, to protect the character and qualify of life in Cohasset.

Johnston/Delahunt helped KO punch-card balloting in Mass.

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Punch-card balloting has become the new evil in American politics, something Massachusetts, and particularly South Shore residents are familiar with.

In 1996, Democrats William Delahunt and Phil Johnston faced off in a primary battle for the party nomination to replace outgoing U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds, D-Cohasset. Johnston won the initial vote tally and a subsequent recount in certain towns including Cohasset and Weymouth. However, Delahunt brought 900 "blank" punch ballots in Weymouth to a Brockton Superior Court judge who counted the ballots herself and overturned the election in Delahunt's favor.

In the months that followed, Secretary of State William Galvin took a long look at the punch-card system and in 1997 decided to outlawed the voting system.

"The problem was with the punch cards," said Cohasset Town Clerk Marion Douglas. "Voters punch out the holes, but some didn't go all the way through. Numerous punch cards recorded votes for different candidates."

Johnston won the Cohasset primary 275 votes to 107. When Delahunt petitioned to have Weymouth recounted, a town he won in, Johnston did the same in Cohasset. The Cohasset recount resulted in a 298-124 advantage for Johnston, a net gain of six votes. However, he lost 108 votes in recounting in other places across the district such as Weymouth and Brockton.

In Weymouth, 900 ballots were deemed "blank" by the scanning machine because the ballot was either not cleanly punched, or the "chad" was only perforated on two sides. According to Johnston, the debate came down to what constituted a vote — whether the chad must be completely off, or should an indented mark count as a vote.

According to Galvin spokesperson Brian McNiff, it was the 1996 primary that got the "de-certification" ball rolling. "The Johnston/Delahunt case obviously led to Sec. Galvin's decision to decertify that system," he said. "There were problems with unrecorded votes. People went in and voted, hit the card and did not clear out, what is a term I've never heard before but is the term of the month, the chad."

McNiff said this type of a problem was "not acceptable." In an affidavit he sent down to Florida election officials, Galvin cited the 1996 election as the straw that broke the camel's back. "Specific problems encountered in the system, which were especially evident in the Congressional primary between William Delahunt and Philip Johnston" was a "continuation of a long series of problems that led my office's decision that the system is inherently unreliable."

Galvin subsequently set up a $3 million loan fund for communities forced to abandon their punch-card ballot voting machines. McNiff said now three-quarters of the state's towns and cities — including Cohasset — use an optical scanner in their elections. Lever systems are still used in some municipalities.

"I think it's very good. I like it a lot," said Douglas about the optical scanners. The town spent $10,000 for the machines – one for each precinct in Cohasset. Voters simply fill in a circle using a black pen, and the results are scanned, similarly like standardized tests in school.

Weymouth City Clerk Frank Fryer also likes the optical scanner system, saying it has been working "very well."

But merely outlawing the punch-card ballot won't bring an end to election controversies like the one the country is experiencing now, said both Johnston and Delahunt.

"What's very disturbing is the lack of consistent standards around the country," said Johnston, a Marshfield resident. "The silver lining [of the Florida controversy] is it is exposing before the American people unbelievable flaws in our electoral process. My hope is that major reforms will be enacted by Congress and the state legislatures' as a consequence of this debacle."

Delahunt spokesperson Steve Schwadron believes Florida will take action once a winner is declared in the presidential election. "I think Florida will look at that [outlawing punch-card balloting] at the state and local level," he said. "In the wake of 1996 locally, there was one constructive consequence in that we moved to fix the problem

"Any human system will have frailties, whether it's the election system or getting a newspaper out every week or passing laws in Congress," he continued. "The test is how we respond to problems that may result and Massachusetts stepped up to the plate."

Delahunt will file bill to abolish Electoral College

By Dan Gravel
DGRAVEL@CNC.COM

In the midst of the chaos surrounding the presidential election, the process of how the country elects its leader has been placed under a microscope, and Congressman William Delahunt wants to scrap the current system.

Delahunt, D-Quincy, says he will file a bill when Congress goes into session next January in an attempt to abolish the Electoral College and have presidential elections decided by popular vote.

"For years, most Americans have ignored the Electoral College as a harmless nuisance. Not anymore," said Delahunt. "The collision between the electoral and popular vote is no longer just a historical curiosity. It's time to abolish the Electoral College, and to count votes of all Americans in presidential elections.

"The Electoral College may or may not have made sense in 1787. But through 21st century eyes, it is as anachronistic as the limitations on suffrage itself."

Said Steve Schwadron, an aide to the Congressman, "[Delahunt] has been working on this for some time, but it has gotten more attention over the last few weeks. "After the election the issue became more than just academic," he said.

Conventional wisdom says if presidents were elected by popular vote candidates would spend the majority of their time campaigning in the most highly populated states, such as New York, California and Texas, but Schwadron disagrees with that thought process.

"There is never anyway to predict anything in life or politics, but I think it would persuade candidates to spend more time in more places," he said. "Votes in Wyoming or Massachusetts would count as much as votes in bigger states."

Schwadron does admit that it will be extremely difficult to get enough support to amend the Constitution.

Likewise, Phil Johnston of Marshfield agrees, saying that the chance of the bill passing will be "very very slight." Johnston is up for election to chairman of the state Democratic party tonight (Wednesday) in Quincy.

He lost a congressional election in 1996 to Delahunt after a recount which resembles the current situation in Florida. (See separate story).

State Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, filed legislation in 1997 trying to correct some of the inadequacies in the system following the Johnston-Delahunt election, but the bill has gone nowhere.

"The Legislature is apparently reticent to change the customs and traditions of dealing with these things (because they do not occur frequently)," Hynes said.

He also said the punch ballots which occasioned the controversial 1996 situation were banned as a result of the contested election. Hynes said they were similar to the ballots used in Florida.

Johnston said the silver lining of the Florida recount is that the American people are, for the first time, learning about problems in our electoral process.

"The Electoral College should be abolished," said Johnston. "It is a vestige of another century. There is a sacred rule in this country that the majority should govern."

Johnston believes if the president was elected by popular vote candidates would focus on larger states, but he said, "They currently do that anyway."

"I don't think the Electoral College has helped put an emphasis on smaller states. I certainly think there should be major reforms in the electoral process as a consequence of this debacle."

Recount is too familiar for some

The nation and world's eyes are stuck firmly on Florida and the perforated circles that will be forever known as "chads." Though Bush's camp recently lost its bid for a Superior Court injunction to stop the hand count, other issues involving deadlines, what constitutes a vote, and absentee ballots have left that state's Presidential election results in a tangled web of sticky litigation.

Weymouth City Clerk Frank Fryer was town clerk in 1996 during the Johnston/Delahunt battle, where Weymouth was ground-zero.

"Everybody thought about it," he said of the similarities between 1996 and the current situation in Florida. "We've been through it A-Z."

In the primary, Johnston won the initial ballot count in the district by 288 votes — as compared to Bush's now 388 vote lead. Under state law, an automatic recount is called if a person wins by a margin of less than one-half of 1 percent, which was not the case in 1996. But candidates are able to petition to have certain precincts recounted, which Delahunt did, as did Johnston. "The recount was very adversarial," Johnston said. "His lawyers were on one side of the table, my lawyers were on the other. When there was a disputed ballot, exactly as is happening in Florida, the local registrar would make the call."

Johnston lost more than 100 votes but still came out of the recount ahead.

But that wasn't the end of it. Delahunt took 900 Weymouth ballots that had been marked "blank" by the scanning machine, and went before Brockton Superior Court Judge Betty Donovan looking to have the blank ballots included in the results. Johnston said it was the next part that continues to upset him.

"It happened very, very quickly. She took the ballots into her chambers and counted them and over turned the election. She never explained what she had done," he said. Johnston contends that Donovan allowed any type of mark to count as a vote, including dimples or "pregnant chads," which is one of the major issues being debated in Florida.

"The standard now is each ballot is considered a vote if one corner of the chad is severed. That indicates the voter voted for the person but didn't go all the way through," he explained. "Under that standard, I would've been elected."

Phil Johnston

Johnston was on a stage outside of the Quincy Public Library standing next to First Lady Hillary Clinton when Donovan made her ruling, giving the election to Delahunt. Johnston appealed the decision to the Massachusetts Judicial Supreme Court to no avail.

The situation puts Johnston in a weird position. Johnston is a party loyalist slated to be elected as the new president of the state Democratic Party this week, but he knows all too well what it is like to be in Bush's shoes.

"I certainly well remember the roller coaster of emotion my family and supporters and I were on during that period," he remembered from his Boston office where he heads up a health care consulting business. But he added, "I do want Gore to win and I feel he will win the state. He will likely win the hand count."

Johnston had no problems with the 1996 recount, but was upset that the election was decided in a court of law, rather than the voting booth – something he hopes the Floridians take heed of. "I don't have a problem with the recount, though I think the entire district should be recounted," he said. "But I do not support a judge to decide who the next President of the United State is."

Local officials who found themselves in the eye of a similar storm four years ago empathized with those involved in the ongoing Florida recount process that may not be resolved by the time the Mariner goes to press.

"I feel bad for the people doing the counting," said Fryer. Weymouth was one of the towns Delahunt asked for a recount in. "I know what we went through here four years ago, with people standing over you, wanting to look at this, look at that, which they have a right to do. But they have a tendency to not show the people doing the counting any mercy."

Cohasset was also involved in the recount at Johnston's request. "It's got to be awful for them down there, it's on such a bigger scale," said Town Clerk Marion Douglas. "They're doing the best they really can do. To have the whole world watching them has got to be very hard."

Steve Schwadron, a representative from Delahunt's office, said the congressman, who won a second-term in last week's elections, can feel both Bush and Gore's pain. "It's not hard to empathize with both Bush and Gore. This is a very uncomfortable period for them," he said. Schwadron echoed Johnston's earlier comments calling the process an "emotional and physical roller coaster," and added, "It's fair to assume both men have a good faith desire to see the will of the voters fulfilled."

LIBRARY CORNER

Artist of the Month

Richard James Cook, a Westwood resident, is a portrait artist and this month's Artist of the Month at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Cook vowed at an early age to pursue his artistic talents after visiting a John Singer Sargent exhibition. He did not know then that he would be painting portraits and would become recognized for his achievements in portraiture.

Cook has a varied background from highest honors in art, to acceptance to Cambridge College of Fine Art. Pursuing a career in commercial arts, Cook progressed as an art director to illustrator and emerged to his final vocation as portrait artist.

Cook's awards and memberships range from People's Choice Award, Academy of the New Church, Kenosha, Michigan in 1992 to Life Member of the Portrait Institute, New York. He is a gallery artist at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset and a member of the North River Arts Society in Marshfield.

Although Cook is based in Boston, he accepts commissions anywhere in the United States and Canada. His portraits are in many private and corporate collections. Cook will work with new clients in decisions about what options are available. He paints his portraits using a combination of both photography and sittings and is committed to 100-percent satisfaction.

If you're seeking a great Christmas idea for a portraiture, take a look at Richard James Cook's artwork on display for November and December at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Murray gives final speech

Shortly after 1 p.m., Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, was led by a US Marine Honor Guard escort onto the floor of the House and to the podium, as her fellow legislatures stood and sung the Marine Corps Hymn.

"I was afraid I was going to cry," said Murray, who Tuesday gave her final speech on the floor of the House of Representatives. After 26 years of constituent service, Murray is stepping down as representative of the 3rd Plymouth District of Massachusetts. "I told the Speaker [Tom Finneran] that he was going to have to finish my speech for me."

On Tuesday, all outgoing House members were allowed one final turn at the podium in front of their fellow colleagues. Murray had seen 12 of these and now she was participating, with members of both her personal and professional families present.

"I don't take the microphone often, only when I'm riled up about something," she started out. "Everyone has thanked everyone that I was going to thank."

She recalled the effort it took for her to even pull papers to run for state office in 1976.

"If all of you don't do as I told you to do and vote with your people, I'm coming back."

Mary Jeannette Murray

"After my father [Nathaniel Hurwitz] died...my wonderful husband talked me into running for selectman. Then our state representative stepped down and I kept saying no," she remembered. "Our daughter came in one day and asked what we were talking about, and she said 'You'd be a great rep.' I slept on it and went to Mass the next morning and I said, 'I'm running, I'm going to get my papers.' He said 'What's the rush?' I said 'OK, I'm not running.' He said, 'Go get the papers.'"

Murray was part of what turned out to be a very successful freshman class. Sitting behind her in the Committee on Local Affairs office was a young Republican from Hudson named Paul Cellucci. Other members included now state auditor Joseph DiNucci, Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating, and current state senators Michael Morrissey, D-Quincy, and Richard Moore, D-Uxbridge.

She thanked both the Democratic and Republican leadership in the House, "I don't believe in a minority – everyone's important;" former Senate President William Bulger, "he was good to me"; and the various clerks, "It's a tough job and they've done a good job."

She also gave a parting warning: "The people come first and then you guys come after that...If all of you don't do as I told you to do and vote with your people, I'm coming back."

Her voice cracked frequently, and she warned repeatedly she was going to cry, but the old Marine in her came through and she was able to finish her speech.

"I want to thank everyone here in this building. Everyone is kind to me," she said. "We need a bird book [directory] for those who are employed here and do nice things for us.

"You are all like my second family and you always will be in my heart."

She partly credited the presence of the Marine Honor Guard, arranged by Minority Leader Fran Marini's office, as to why she didn't cry. "I think it was the surprise of the Marines," she said afterwards. "I was sort of embarrassed, I said 'This is crazy.'

"Everyone has been so kind to me," she continued. "Everyone employed here; I deeply appreciate all their kindness."

Democrat Garrett Bradley of Hingham was elected last week to replace Murray.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Drug question

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to offer my personal thanks to the voters of Cohasset for their part in defeating the misnamed "drug forfeiture" question on the Nov. 7 ballot.

The trio of out-of-state billionaires sponsoring this question, and their operatives and advertisements, admittedly presented an attractive package, but it was misleading.

Those who voted in favor of this question, realizing that drug treatment is an important component in addressing the drug problem, should rest assured that the law enforcement community agrees with you on that issue. Drug users caught with quantities consistent with personal use are already shepherded toward drug evaluation and treatment. Anyone who wishes to see this firsthand can spend a morning in any district court.

The unadvertised provisions of the question, the reason it was branded a "Trojan Horse," would have created a loophole allowing those caught trafficking in thousands of dollars of cocaine and heroin to avoid the minimum mandatory sentences for those crimes by asking for treatment and having those charges dismissed outright, even if they had been convicted for drug trafficking in the past.

It would also have created another loophole allowing drug traffickers who admittedly do not abuse drugs to nevertheless petition the court for treatment, and have their charges dismissed, if they simply declare themselves "at risk" for becoming drug-dependent.

Furthermore, as District Attorney, I am working hard to address the problem of drug addiction proactively. A year ago, I initiated and helped secure a federal Drug Court grant for Quincy District Court, which serves 40 percent of the population of the country.

Drug courts work to disrupt the cycle of addiction through treatment, followed by mandatory supervision and testing after the treatment is complete. And it does so at a lower cost-per-offender than imprisonment. National studies have shown that drug courts have cut the recidivism rates among low-level drug offenders in half, sometimes in quarters in the areas they serve.

That is a treatment initiative that has proven itself effective across the nation and one I look forward to seeing implemented here in Norfolk County.

Road rage incident leads to arrest

When police arrived at the scene early Saturday morning, two Scituate men were arguing on the side of Rte. 3A just north of Shaw's Plaza in Cohasset after an alleged incidence of road rage.

Further investigation revealed that Robert L. Quattlebaum, 33, who drove a Ford Escort wagon, and Eugene A. Garofalo, 39, who drove a Toyota Corolla, were apparently jockeying along 3A near Shaw's Plaza while traveling northbound at 6:45 a.m. when Garofalo tried to pass Quattlebaum.

Garofalo told police that Quattlebaum would not let him pass, hit his brakes and then swerved to the left into the southbound lane, forcing him off the road.

Quattlebaum said Garofalo's red Ford Escort had been tailgating him and when he hit his brakes, his car fishtailed just as Garofalo was trying to pass where the road narrows from two lanes to two, forcing Garofalo off the road.

A witness told police that the Quattlebaum vehicle had intentionally forced the Garofalo vehicle off the road. She further stated that both drivers were driving erratically and "behaving like children," police said.

Police arrested Quattlebaum of 10 Bradford Ave. and charged him with assault by a dangerous weapon (motor vehicle) and operating a motor vehicle negligently as to endanger. Quattlebaum had allegedly left the scene but was persuaded to return by the witness who reported she chased him, told him she had noted his license plate number and was calling police.

Garofalo of 4 Bonnie Briar Circle, was cited with operating to endanger and failure to stay within marked lanes.

Heroin suspected

Police charged a 30-year-old Hull woman with possession of a Class A substance thought to be heroin after she went to police headquarters Thursday afternoon to report her pocketbook was stolen.

Franca M. Clay alleged her pocketbook containing prescription pills, $30 in cash and other items was stolen while she left the car running at a Rte. 3A sub shop in Cohasset.

While at the station, police discovered Clay had two outstanding warrants for her arrest and placed her in custody. Further investigation revealed she had a suspended driver's license.

Police Sgt. Robert Jackson found the black purse she had reported stolen in plain view while shutting off Clay's vehicle outside the station. After bringing the purse to booking for inventory, police said they found a small plastic bag containing a substance thought to be heroin along with some drug paraphernalia. Police also found a bottle of with 30 prescription pills that was filled with 120 pills the day before. Police suspect Clay, who allegedly appeared "high" to officers, reported her pocketbook stolen so she could get more pills.

Police charged Clay with possession of a Class A substance, filing a false police report and operation after license suspension.

Range of village options on table

Group led the audience on a tour of the village through a series of slides while he pointed out areas where sidewalks, crosswalks, lighting and parking could be improved or enhanced.

Some of the goals of potential improvements include:

- Striking a balance between the vehicular and pedestrian environment so that one doesn't exclude the other
- Creating a clarity of environment, so people know they are coming into someplace special
- Improving the visual environment, building on what is there now to make it more attractive

O'Connor also showed slides of other communities that used a range of brick and other treatments on sidewalks and crosswalks, screening of certain areas like parking lots, and placement of utilities to create a particular effect.

"Like a carpet that can tie a room together, sidewalks can tie a district together," O'Connor said.

Other suggestions included more plantings, benches and even a kiosk to anchor the tiny Ship Cove Park next to Tedeschi's.

The "infamous" sidewalk that is delineated by a white line in front of St. Stephen's and provides a critical link from the village to the common generated the most discussion.

The Cecil Group said the lack of a sidewalk in front of St. Stephen's is a "true hazard" and recommended one be developed there even if that meant removing part of the ledge face.

But Bob Martin of Goodale Insurance in the village said shoehorning a sidewalk in there would not eliminate safety concerns because pedestrians would still be too close to traffic.

"I don't see attacking a nice piece of landscape to squeeze in a sidewalk that I consider to be unsafe," he said.

The audience greeted suggestions for a one-way traffic circulation pattern on Elm Street with cries of "been there, done that."

"Forget it, it won't work," Martin said. The town has examined and then abandoned making Elm Street from Brook to S. Main streets one-way in the past because of public safety concerns with emergency vehicles being diverted from the most direct route.

The Cecil Group also singled out the "sidewalks" across from the community center along Depot Court (in front of the kitchen design business) and Cohasset News on Brook Street as areas for improved, more pedestrian friendly sidewalks. The existing asphalt sidewalks there are not clearly delineated.

Cecil said in areas where cars must continue to cross sidewalks, like at Cohasset News — rolling, textured curbs could be created so the motorist realizes that he is in a "pedestrian zone."

The Cecil Group will present more images incorporating some of the ideas presented last week at the next village forum slated for January.

"Our job is to figure out how to tune Cohasset up while we agree that Cohasset is nice already," Cecil said.

Depending on the final decision, the cost of upgrading the village could run about $2-1/4 million. The money would come from a combination of 80 percent grants, 12-1/2 percent private donations and 7-1/2 percent tax dollars, said Dean Rizzo, CRC executive director. Selectmen and Town Meeting would have final decision-making authority over any improvements on town property or the using town funds.

Stars of the Week

Dave Nigro. It took a while for the first year head coach of the Cohasset soccer team to convince his boys to buy into his ball control system. However, once he did, the results spoke for themselves. The Skippers started the season 3-6, but then won 10 in a row before falling to Norwell in the Southeast Sectional quarterfinals on Sunday.

Nigro loses five starters to graduation, but is extremely high on his core of returning players , and points out "Next year they'll all know my system coming in."

Skippers remarkable run ends in quarterfinals

Third time versus Norwell not the charm for boys soccer team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There is a popular adage in interscholastic sports circles stating that it is difficult to beat the same team three times in one season.

Unfortunately, this theory did not bare out for the Cohasset boys soccer team. In fact, the Skippers third meeting of the season with Norwell, in Sunday's Southeast Sectional quarterfinals, followed an eerily similar script as the two regular season meetings, with Cohasset falling for the third straight time by a single goal.

Norwell 1, Cohasset 0

As was the case in the two regular season matches between the South Shore League rivals, the Skippers maintained notable advantages in both the territorial and possession battles, just to see the Clippers wind up one better in the only statistical category that matters: goals.

The game's only goals came 21:09 in when Chris Camerota took a pass from Brett Olsen 35 yards out to the right of the Cohasset net, and drilled a low bullet that Skipper keeper Nick Pestone was able to deflect away with a nice diving effort. However, Norwell's Joe Rinchiuso was in perfect position by the far post to chip in the rebound.

The Skippers outshot Norwell 9-7, truly testing Norwell's All-League keeper John Conlon on a few and

Reflections on fantastic season

This field hockey squad will be remembered fondly

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset field hockey team finished out its remarkable season last week, falling in the quarterfinal round of the state tournament to Martha's Vineyard, 4-0.

What does this mean? It means that only two teams were able to defeat Cohasset's stacked squad, with 11 talented seniors.

The first was Hanover, the team that earned the first seed in the state tournament. The other was Martha's Vineyard, this year's state champions, as they went on to beat Dedham in the finals.

However, the girls will not be remembered for the loss. Rather, their terrific accomplishments will be what sticks in peoples' minds in years to come.

The Lady Skippers opened the season with eight straight wins, the team's following seemingly increasing with every win. The Skippers were riding high yet remaining modest, and not taking any games lightly.

"You have to have fun," declared Cohasset coach Debbie Bostwick, recently named South Shore

Indians win shootout over Skippers

Cohasset outgunned in game of big plays, 28-18

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

HANOVER — There's nothing diehard football fans appreciate more than a good game of smash mouth. The majority of us who fancy the game, however, prefer the more aesthetic and dramatic splendor of the big play, momentum swings and flashy athleticism.

Clearly, Thursday's South Shore League showdown between upstarts Hanover and Cohasset turned out to be one for the masses. There was well over 700 yards of offense on the evening, with most of that coming from the respective quarterbacks, Cohasset's Jason Brown and Hanover's Mike Carven, each of whom threw for almost 200 yards and three touchdowns. The pair of talented junior signal callers also combined for 138 yards on the ground.

"Those are two talented quarterbacks who are going to do a lot of good things next year," observed Hanover head coach Dave Maimaron.

The Skippers came into this game still feeling the high of last week's 16-7 victory over Norwell, Cohasset's first over the perennial SSL powerhouse in a decade, and one coach Tony Rolfe called "the best he'd ever coached."

"We just didn't make the plays when we had to," summed up a clearly disheartened Rolfe following Thursday's loss, which dropped the Skippers to 5-4. "We put ourselves in a quick hole in the second half, and then we were scrambling."

Although the third-year coach felt his team was physically ready for the game, he did not dismiss the notion that there might have been something of a letdown coming off last week's emotional victory.

"There might be something to that," conceded Rolfe. "The kids might have had it in their heads a little bit that they could just show up and get this win. I hope that wasn't the case, but this definitely wasn't one of our better efforts defensively, and I don't really have an explanation."

The crowd didn't have to wait long for the aforementioned fireworks to begin. On the game's very first play from scrimmage, Brown (6-of-12 passing for 188 yards) tossed out what looked to be a nice conservative pass into the right flat to split end Nick Bolster. However, the talented junior shook off his man and then split another pair of Indians to pop into the clear and race for the 71-yard touchdown.

Things calmed down for a while after that, with most of the play for the remainder of the first half occurring between the 30-yard lines. The one notable exception was a long drive by Hanover, which died on downs at the Skippers 3-yard line when Cohasset's front line stood their ground on fourth-and-one.

The Indians finally answered the Skippers early eruption with one of their own just 1:14 before the break. With the ball at Cohasset's 26-yard line, Carven lofted the ball toward the right front corner of the end zone and streaking wide out Kevin Sullivan. Cohasset deep backs Liam Martin and Brian Krupczak both managed to get back into the play.

The leaping Martin was the first to get his hands on the ball, but it deflected off his fingertips, which crossed up Krupczak, who had appeared to be in position to make the play. The ball then caromed off his arm and back toward the end zone where Sullivan did a remarkable job spinning around and corralling it with one hand for the touchdown. The score remained tied at 6-6, however, as the kick failed.

Carven (seven-of-11 passing for 170 yards) came out firing to open the second half, completing a big 13-yard pass to tailback Mike Marani for a first down on third-and-seven. Two plays later, Carven again dropped back and let fly with a bomb down the left sideline, perfectly leading Nick Bolger for a 46-yard touchdown. Carven then hit captain Dana Butner in the left front of the end zone for the two-point conversion which brought the score to 14-6.

With momentum on their side, the Indians defense came out fired up and held Cohasset without a first down for the first time on the night to force the punt.

Continuing to mix up his play calling, Maimaron went to the run on first down. On the next play, he called for another pass to the left side, this one to Marani in the flat after a nice misdirection. With several Cohasset front liners staying home on the fake, Marani making him earn his s ninth shutout of the season and second in a row of the tourney.

Just minutes into the second period, captain Doug O'Brien was the first to reach a beautiful long lob pass from fellow captain Eric Shea just 20 yards away from the Norwell goal. However, Conlon bravely rushed to the spot to get a hand on ball just as it left O'Brien's foot, deflecting it over the goal.

A few minutes later, Shea lofted a free kick from 30 yards out near the top left of the goal box that Greg O'Connell was able to chip through to Tim Baird by the far post, but again the charging Conlon managed to get there just in the nick of time, smothering the ball just as Baird was stepping into it.

"John came up very big," assessed Norwell coach John Osgood. "He pretty much controlled the box. He's a good athlete and very, very intelligent player. There's no doubt that he was a major factor in this game."

Baird had another chance late in the game when he broke free in close to the left of the net, but senior Norwell fullback Steve Fitzgerald pulled a page out of his keeper's book with a last second slide that knocked the shot wide.

"This is the way it was in the first two games," noted first year Cohasset coach Dave Nigro somberly, following the season ending loss. "We certainly proved that we could play with (Norwell). The difference was that they finished their opportunities, and we just couldn't find a way to do that."

Osgood echoed those sentiments, noting "Cohasset is a very talented team. We knew they'd come out real emotional, and we were ready for it, but they still gave us all we could handle. It's just fortunate that we were able to finish when we had to."

Of course, that had been the story for Norwell all year long, as the Cohasset win moved them to 18-0 on the season, including three tourney wins. The Clippers string ran out on Monday, though, with Medway beating them 3-1 to capture the Southeast Sectional crown.

The loss ended the Skippers' run of 10 consecutive wins, including the three tourney victories, and capped off their season at 13-7 overall.

"We made quite a run, and the boys should be proud," said Nigro. "We left it all out on the field."

Cohasset had 10 seniors on the varsity squad this year. In addition to captains Shea and O'Brien, Nigro will also lose his starting keeper in Pestone to graduation, along with two other starters, Heath Heinz and John Hertig. The others who wrapped up their high school soccer career are Ben Bixby, Ted Gedhill, Casey Brewer, Robin Cunningham and Geoff MacWilliams.

Despite the losses, Nigro is excited about the prospects for his second season on the Cohasset bench.

"These guys will be hard to replace," assessed Nigro, "but I think we've got a nice core of returning talent, and a few guys who are capable of stepping in to fill those voids."

League Coach of the Year. "If not, than you should not even be here."

On their ninth game, Cohasset became the first team on the season to score on powerhouse Hanover. Cohasset dropped the game 2-1, but Hanover coach Judy Schneieder conceded later that Cohasset actually outplayed her girls.

Later in the season, after a tie to the perennially powerful Notre Dame squad (a game that clinched a post-season berth), Cohasset tore up their next two opponents to move their record to 10-1-1.

Next up was Homecoming, where Cohasset delighted an enormous crowd with a 4-0 shellacking of Norwell.

Cohasset then played its best two games of the regular season, a 1-0 win over Notre Dame and a 1-1 tie in the home re-match with Hanover.

Those games solidified Cohasset's second place standing in the league, just one point behind Hanover in the standings.

After a 2-0 win over Scituate to end the season on Senior Recognition Night, Cohasset moved onto the state tourney.

Drawing a #2 seed in the Southeast Sectionals and a bye in the first round, sophomore Heather Peraino slapped in an overtime goal to lift her team past the Carver Crusaders and into the quarterfinals.

After the loss to Martha's Vineyard, the fans stayed to greet the players with a standing ovation. This team had many outstanding individuals, who accomplished things that were equally as impressive as the team's feats.

Senior captain Andi Shaughnessy, named one of five Cohasset's All-Stars, came in second in the league in scoring, netting two hat tricks along the way.

Senior All-Star goalie Krysten Considine led the league with 12 shut outs in 17 games and allowed a league low seven goals.

"It is so much fun working with her," said senior Ashley Ulmer, who was on a fantastic defensive squad along with seniors Kidder, Morgan Hurley and Karen McMorris. "There is no fear. If the ball gets past you, you know she is there."

The other members of the All-Star team were seniors Maggie O'Connor,Kelly Devine and Sarah Kidder.

Senior Kelly Lordan finished second on the team in scoring with 13 goals and four assists, while Peraino finished third.

The unsung heroes of the team—the "B squad," as they like to be called— also played a great role in the success of the team.

"The juniors who were backing [the seniors] up, they know their time is next year," noted coach Bostwick.

This season was dedicated to the memory of Cohasset's long-time and much beloved athletic director Clark Chatterton, who died of cancer this past Summer.

And if he were here to witness this year's team, he would have been as gratified as anyone.

Said Bostwick: "I am so proud of the girls, finishing off an incredible season."

Middle School girls complete 'great' season

By Mike Spelman

The Cohasset girls Middle School soccer team has just completed a great 7-4-1 Fall season.

Coach Michelle Murphy had 22 extremely talented seventh and eighth grade girls participating in the soccer program.

"At the Middle School, our philosophy focuses on the pure fun in playing the game and does not emphasize wins or losses," said Murphy. "I'm very proud of the sportsmanship and effort that they demonstrated throughout the season."

Each girl on the team had an opportunity to play in every game.

Murphy reported that the team developed strategies to improve kick-off and corner kick positioning.

found some room down the sideline, and he followed some great downfield blocking 53-yards for the touchdown. Bolger then split the uprights on the kick to make it 21-6 just 4:24 into the second half.

On the ensuing Cohasset possession, for the second time in a row, the Indian defenders found a way to contain the Skippers' one-two running punch of Krupczak (30 carries for 113 yards) and Brown (12 for 84), who had kept the chains moving for Cohasset in the first half.

"Hanover did a nice job of taking Brian out of the game, especially in the early part of the second half," noted Rolfe. "He's not an easy kid to slow down, but they did it."

Hanover's Matt Dwyer (13 tackles) Dana Butner (11), and John O'Brien (11) were particularly huge, as they repeatedly stuffed the Cohasset running game. Also coming up big was sophomore Nick Riordan, who got his first varsity start in place of starting fullback and middle linebacker Nick Kemp, out with mononucleosis and an enlarged spleen.

"Defensively we made some adjustments at halftime to try to stop Cohasset from getting to the outside," Maimaron reported. "We knew they were a tailback oriented offense, and we saw some tendencies in the first half that we were able to take advantage of."

Obviously, the Hanover coaching staff also noted a tendency or two in the Skippers on the defensive side of the ball. Though the first year head coach was not as forthcoming with information on this front, he did admit that Carven was given a good deal more responsibility for making plays in the second half.

With a two TD lead, the Indians opted to keep the ball on the ground with their third possession of the half to eat some clock. Craven showed off some of his versatility by picking up 37 yards on the second play from scrimmage, cutting back inside on an option call and skillfully following some nice blocking to get the Indians to Cohasset 19-yard line. From there, it took the hosts only two plays to add to their lead, with Marani cutting one outside for nine yards and Butner then busting it up the gut on a draw play to go 10 yards untouched for the TD with 1:52 remaining in the third quarter.

28-6. Ball game, right?...Not to the Skippers way of thinking.

With 5:50 remaining in the game, Brown capped off a five play- 39 yard drive by going back to the play that worked magic in the first half, connecting with Bolster in the right flat for the eight yard TD pass.

Hanover recovered the predicted onside kick. However, with Carven on the bench suffering from leg cramps, the Skippers held Hanover to three plays and a punt. Sophomore defensive end Kosimo Cambi came up with the decisive play, sticking backup quarterback Adam Pardo for the two yard loss on a third and three QB sneak call.

The Hanover punt backed Cohasset up to its own 12-yard line, but Krupczak finally found the running room that had not been there in the early stages of the half, making runs of 31, six and seven yards on the next three plays. This tightened up the defense enough for Brown to once again find his favorite target, Bolster, hitting him on stride as he raced down the right sideline for their third TD hookup of the game, this one good for 46 yards. However, Brown was stopped on the two-point conversion attempt to leave it a 10-point game, dimming the Skippers hopes with 3:02 on clock.

Showing some grit, the Skippers managed to stop the Indians once again and drive deep into Hanover territory, highlighted by another big hookup between Bolster and Brown, this one for 33 yards. However, the drive died on downs at the 16-yard line to close out the game.

"We just put ourselves in too big a hole," offered Bolster, who finished the game with three touchdowns and six receptions for 188 yards. "We came back hard, but we just ran out of time."

Osgood hosts coat/jacket drive

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

School's In has a lot of great information this week. Please keep it coming. All staff, parents and students are welcome to submit anything related to the schools. All photos are welcome as well and can be submitted to me the same way that the news is.

The first is one that is something that all of us can help in. The Osgood School is hosting a coat/jacket drive for the needy. If any of you have coats, jackets, quilts or blankets that are looking for a new home, please bring them to the front hall at the Osgood School. It will feel great to know that you are keeping someone toasty warm in the upcoming freezing weather!

This month is Massachusetts Family Literacy Month and the schools are all working to celebrate this. Every year, Governor Cellucci runs a book-recycling program called, "Spread The Word." Donated books can be sent to school with your child. Books can be older or newer, but need to in good condition and relevant to that ages of the school you are donating to. At the Osgood School, the children in Mrs. Owens-Rigby's class will collect, review, sort and pack them. Finally, a representative from the state Department of Education will pick up the books and distribute them to the recipient school. Right away, five books are given directly to needy children to take home and keep. Again, what a great way to clean out at home and teach the children about giving!

Also happening to help with books and reading is the PSO Scholastic Book Fair taking place at the Joseph Osgood School. The dates for this will be Nov. 28-30 in the Osgood Library from 9 a.m.-3 p.m. each day. Wed, Nov. 29, there will be extended hours from 3-6 p.m.

The PSO Scholastic Book Fair is one of the biggest fund-raisers with all the proceeds going directly to the Osgood School. This event has proven to be a great way to get some holiday shopping done while encouraging reading at the same time! Check it out!

MCAS Information! All parents are reminded that the results of the MCAS testing done last year have been released to the state Department of Education and the individual test results for each student will not be available for another week or two. Please do not try to get this information from the schools as they do not have it. As soon as the information becomes available, you will receive it as well as any information on meetings and discussions on the testing.

 If anyone is interested in obtaining a wonderful holiday gift, the PSO sweatshirt drive is extended until Friday, Nov.17. The sweatshirts are heavy weight Lee shirts, with a crew neck, ribbed collar, cuffs and waistband and have COH on the front with a circle around it. Youth sizes are S-M-L and come in gray or navy. Adult sizes are S-M-L-XL-XXL and also come in gray or navy. The youth sizes cost $20 and the adult sizes are $22 with XXL at $24. All checks are made payable to the Cohasset PSO and you can call Mary Goodwin at 383-0381, Andrea Kinnealey at 383-2848 or Sarah Porter at 383-2029.

The School Committee meeting at 7:30 p.m. tonight (Thursday, Nov. 16) at CMHS library, the PSO will ask the committee to address the current status of the technology position being shared with the Osgood and Deer Hill schools. Currently, one teacher is being shared between the two schools. The PSO is requesting funding for an Osgood teacher so that Lisa Kalipinski can return full time to the Deer Hill. Please attend and voice your opinion!

That is it for this week. Send any information that you may have in regards to the schools to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or 923-1057. Have a great week!

Second-graders write about local Olympian

By Alexandra Butler

Nov. 2, was an exciting day. Christine Collins came into our class. She brought her bronze medal. I got to wear it and I also got to hold her paddle. I even got her autograph. It was a lot of fun. When she came, all of the second graders sat in the forum. It was very exciting!

By Merrick Sease

Yesterday Christine Collins came into the Joseph Osgood School. She brought in her oar and her bronze medal too. My mom rows too. The paddle was very big. I got to hold it. It had red, white and blue on it. I also got to hold her bronze medal. It was very heavy when I held it. I liked to listen to the stories she told. I even got her autograph.

By Morgan Grasz

Christine Collins came to our school. She told us about the Olympics. She brought her oar with her. When she got her bronze metal she felt good. When her team moved to Australia her team was very happy. Her partner's name was Sarah Garner. The name of the boat was called a shell. When her team got in the Olympics they really trained hard so they could get a good place in the Olympics. there are six lanes in the Olympics. They got in lane three. She said you usually will win. Some people might like lane 1 or 2. But in 3 and 4 you can just turn your head to the right and the left (to see the other rowers.) she told us about how they weighed the shell and oar.

She was rowing since she was 18. When she was in college she decided to try a new sport. So she decided to row and she did it and she was good at it. She was a very fast rower. It is very hard to win the gold metal. She was a good rower when she got her metal.

Christine Collins, Olympic bronze medallist, visits Mrs. Collins' second-graders.

Skippers remarkable run ends in quarterfinals

making him earn his s ninth shutout of the season and second in a row of the tourney.

Just minutes into the second period, captain Doug O'Brien was the first to reach a beautiful long lob pass from fellow captain Eric Shea just 20 yards away from the Norwell goal. However, Conlon bravely rushed to the spot to get a hand on ball just as it left O'Brien's foot, deflecting it over the goal.

A few minutes later, Shea lofted a free kick from 30 yards out near the top left of the goal box that Greg O'Connell was able to chip through to Tim Baird by the far post, but again the charging Conlon managed to get there just in the nick of time, smothering the ball just as Baird was stepping into it.

"John came up very big," assessed Norwell coach John Osgood. "He pretty much controlled the box. He's a good athlete and very, very intelligent player. There's no doubt that he was a major factor in this game."

Baird had another chance late in the game when he broke free in close to the left of the net, but senior Norwell fullback Steve Fitzgerald pulled a page out of his keeper's book with a last second slide that knocked the shot wide.

"This is the way it was in the first two games," noted first year Cohasset coach Dave Nigro somberly, following the season ending loss. "We certainly proved that we could play with (Norwell). The difference was that they finished their opportunities, and we just couldn't find a way to do that."

Osgood echoed those sentiments, noting "Cohasset is a very talented team. We knew they'd come out real emotional, and we were ready for it, but they still gave us all we could handle. It's just fortunate that we were able to finish when we had to."

Of course, that had been the story for Norwell all year long, as the Cohasset win moved them to 18-0 on the season, including three tourney wins. The Clippers string ran out on Monday, though, with Medway beating them 3-1 to capture the Southeast Sectional crown.

The loss ended the Skippers' run of 10 consecutive wins, including the three tourney victories, and capped off their season at 13-7 overall.

"We made quite a run, and the boys should be proud," said Nigro. "We left it all out on the field."

Cohasset had 10 seniors on the varsity squad this year. In addition to captains Shea and O'Brien, Nigro will also lose his starting keeper in Pestone to graduation, along with two other starters, Heath Heinz and John Hertig. The others who wrapped up their high school soccer career are Ben Bixby, Ted Gedhill, Casey Brewer, Robin Cunningham and Geoff MacWilliams.

Despite the losses, Nigro is excited about the prospects for his second season on the Cohasset bench.

"These guys will be hard to replace," assessed Nigro, "but I think we've got a nice core of returning talent, and a few guys who are capable of stepping in to fill those voids."

League Coach of the Year. "If not, than you should not even be here."

On their ninth game, Cohasset became the first team on the season to score on powerhouse Hanover. Cohasset dropped the game 2-1, but Hanover coach Judy Schneieder conceded later that Cohasset actually outplayed her girls.

Later in the season, after a tie to the perennially powerful Notre Dame squad (a game that clinched a post-season berth), Cohasset tore up their next two opponents to move their record to 10-1-1.

Next up was Homecoming, where Cohasset delighted an enormous crowd with a 4-0 shellacking of Norwell.

Cohasset then played its best two games of the regular season, a 1-0 win over Notre Dame and a 1-1 tie in the home re-match with Hanover.

Those games solidified Cohasset's second place standing in the league, just one point behind Hanover in the standings.

After a 2-0 win over Scituate to end the season on Senior Recognition Night, Cohasset moved onto the state tourney.

Clark's memory to be honored

The Clark Chatterton Honor Committee cordially invites one and all to attend the Thanksgiving football game at Alumni Field at 10 a.m. on Thursday, Nov. 23. At halftime, Clark will be honored. In addition, the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund has been established. This fund will be available to all Cohasset Middle/High School athletic teams and activities to purchase those items which are not supported through the regular process. The fund-raiser will be threefold: 1. a kickoff one-time drive, 2. an annual 6K walk/run on the morning of Homecoming and 3. an annual Music Circus show with a block of tickets available to the public with an amount added to the Memorial Fund. Contributions to the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund can be made: c/o Jack DeLorenzo, Cohasset Middle/High School, 143 Pond St., Cohasset MA 02025

Osgood hosts coat/jacket drive

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

School's In has a lot of great information this week. Please keep it coming. All staff, parents and students are welcome to submit anything related to the schools. All photos are welcome as well and can be submitted to me the same way that the news is.

The first is one that is something that all of us can help in. The Osgood School is hosting a coat/jacket drive for the needy. If any of you have coats, jackets, quilts or blankets that are looking for a new home, please bring them to the front hall at the Osgood School. It will feel great to know that you are keeping someone toasty warm in the upcoming freezing weather!

This month is Massachusetts Family Literacy Month and the schools are all working to celebrate this. Every year, Governor Cellucci runs a book-recycling program called, "Spread The Word." Donated books can be sent to school with your child. Books can be older or newer, but need to in good condition and relevant to that ages of the school you are donating to. At the Osgood School, the children in Mrs. Owens-Rigby's class will collect, review, sort and pack them. Finally, a representative from the state Department of Education will pick up the books and distribute them to the recipient school. Right away, five books are given directly to needy children to take home and keep. Again, what a great way to clean out at home and teach the children about giving!

Also happening to help with books and reading is the PSO Scholastic Book Fair taking place at the Joseph Osgood School. The dates for this will be Nov. 28-30 in the Osgood Library from 9 a.m.-3 p.m. each day. Wed, Nov. 29, there will be extended hours from 3-6 p.m.

The PSO Scholastic Book Fair is one of the biggest fund-raisers with all the proceeds going directly to the Osgood School. This event has proven to be a great way to get some holiday shopping done while encouraging reading at the same time! Check it out!

MCAS Information! All parents are reminded that the results of the MCAS testing done last year have been released to the state Department of Education and the individual test results for each student will not be available for another week or two. Please do not try to get this information from the schools as they do not have it. As soon as the information becomes available, you will receive it as well as any information on meetings and discussions on the testing.

 If anyone is interested in obtaining a wonderful holiday gift, the PSO sweatshirt drive is extended until Friday, Nov.17. The sweatshirts are heavy weight Lee shirts, with a crew neck, ribbed collar, cuffs and waistband and have COH on the front with a circle around it. Youth sizes are S-M-L and come in gray or navy. Adult sizes are S-M-L-XL-XXL and also come in gray or navy. The youth sizes cost $20 and the adult sizes are $22 with XXL at $24. All checks are made payable to the Cohasset PSO and you can call Mary Goodwin at 383-0381, Andrea Kinnealey at 383-2848 or Sarah Porter at 383-2029.

The School Committee meeting at 7:30 p.m. tonight (Thursday, Nov. 16) at CMHS library, the PSO will ask the committee to address the current status of the technology position being shared with the Osgood and Deer Hill schools. Currently, one teacher is being shared between the two schools. The PSO is requesting funding for an Osgood teacher so that Lisa Kalipinski can return full time to the Deer Hill. Please attend and voice your opinion!

That is it for this week. Send any information that you may have in regards to the schools to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or 923-1057. Have a great week!

Second-graders write about local Olympian

By Alexandra Butler

Nov. 2, was an exciting day. Christine Collins came into our class. She brought her bronze medal. I got to wear it and I also got to hold her paddle. I even got her autograph. It was a lot of fun. When she came, all of the second graders sat in the forum. It was very exciting!

By Merrick Sease

Yesterday Christine Collins came into the Joseph Osgood School. She brought in her oar and her bronze medal too. My mom rows too. The paddle was very big. I got to hold it. It had red, white and blue on it. I also got to hold her bronze medal. It was very heavy when I held it. I liked to listen to the stories she told. I even got her autograph.

By Morgan Grasz

Christine Collins came to our school. She told us about the Olympics. She brought her oar with her. When she got her bronze metal she felt good. When her team moved to Australia her team was very happy. Her partner's name was Sarah Garner. The name of the boat was called a shell. When her team got in the Olympics they really trained hard so they could get a good place in the Olympics. there are six lanes in the Olympics. They got in lane three. She said you usually will win. Some people might like lane 1 or 2. But in 3 and 4 you can just turn your head to the right and the left (to see the other rowers.) she told us about how they weighed the shell and oar.

She was rowing since she was 18. When she was in college she decided to try a new sport. So she decided to row and she did it and she was good at it. She was a very fast rower. It is very hard to win the gold metal. She was a good rower when she got her metal.

Christine Collins, Olympic bronze medallist, visits Mrs. Collins' second-graders.

OBITUARIES

Frances Robinson

Frances (Mitchell) Robinson, 91, of Cohasset, died November 11, 2000, at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth after a short illness.

Mrs. Robinson was born in Cambridge and lived in Cohasset for 35 years.

Wife of the late Churchill Robinson, she leaves her daughter, Jane F. Angland of Scituate, and three grandchildren and a great-granddaughter. She was also the mother of the late William C. Robinson.

A memorial Mass will be held at a later date.

Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Norwell.

Donations may be made to charity.

Jane Marie Barnes

Jane Marie (Smith) Barnes, 65, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, died November 12, 2000, at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth after a long illness.

Mrs. Barnes worked at College Town in Rockland and Plymouth Rogers in Hanover for many years.

She enjoyed to play bingo.

Born in Weymouth, she was raised and educated in Cohasset.

Mrs. Barnes is survived by her husband, John T. Barnes; three sons, Howie D. Phillips of Marshfield, Scott P. Barnes of Whitman, and John T. Barnes of Abington; a daughter, Marie Bergman of Hull; two brothers, Hugh Smith of Scituate and George Smith of Weymouth; and many nephews and nieces.

A graveside funeral service officiated by Rev. Gary A. Ritz was held at Woodside Cemetery in Cohasset.

Donations may be made to the Joslin Diabetes Center, 1 Joshlin Place, Boston, 02215..

Robert G. Ripley

Robert G. Ripley, 63, of Cohasset, formerly of Hingham, died Oct. 27, 2000, after a brief illness. He was proud to be a Cohasset resident and over the years remained active on several local boards, including the Cohasset Community Center.

Mr. Ripley served in the United States Army from 1954 until 1960. He worked at Mainco School Supply Co. in Canton. During the 1980s he was a real estate broker for Petersen's Real Estate. For the past 11 years he worked for Sestito's Landscaping Service of Cohasset.

He leaves three daughters, Elizabeth Gaye Whitecage and her husband Jack of St. Petersburg, Fla., Carrie Ripley Devanney and her husband Jayme of Warwich, R.I., and Jennifer Alice Ripley of North Haven Conn.; a son, Robert Scott Ripley and his wife Lisa of North Haven, Conn.; a brother, William Ripley, of Montrose, Colo.; four grandchildren, Daniel and Sara Whitecage, Garrett Ripley, Caroline Devanney; and his former wife, Elizabeth B. Ripley. He was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Ripley, Jr., also of Cohasset.

A memorial service was held at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset Village.

Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be sent to the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, Special Ripley Memorial Account, 48 South Main Street, Cohasset 02025, to be used for the beautification of the memorial flag area at the Cohasset High School Alumnae, field given in memory of his father, William Ripley, Jr.

Virginia Anderson

Virginia M. (Farrow) Anderson, 77, of Cohasset, an administrative assistant, died Nov. 2 at home.

Mrs. Anderson worked at the Cohasset Community Center for more than 10 years.

She was also a volunteer at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth for many years.

Mrs. Anderson was born, raised and educated in Dorchester, where she was a former parishioner of St. Ann's Church.

Wife of the late Francis X. Anderson, she leaves two sons, Michael Anderson of Norwell and Stephen Anderson of Carver; six daughters, Patricia Gallagher of Scituate, Barbara Welsh of Putney, Vt., Dorothy Woodruff of Sanford, Maine, Kathleen Hicks of Morristown, N.J., Karen O'Brien of Carver and Marie Peterson of Bingham, Maine; two brothers, Joseph Farrow of West Harwich and John Farrow of Weymouth; two sisters, Maryann Gorham and Geraldine Shea, both of Quincy; 20 grandchildren; and 10 great-grandchildren. She was also mother of the late Christine Anderson.

The Rev. John R. Mulvehill conducted a funeral Mass at St. Anthony Church. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Memorial contributions may be made to St. Anthony Parish Center, 10 Summer St., Cohasset, 02205.

POLICE BRIEFS

Crossing guard

Police Chief Brian Noonan said Sandra Zappolo has been hired as the school crossing guard at a rate of $12 an hour. He said Zappolo was working as a school aide when the police department hired her. A recent decision by selectmen and the town manager put school crossing guards under the jurisdiction of police.

Zappolo covers the Deer Hill/Osgood schools crosswalk on Sohier Street in the mornings and afternoons.

Head-on collision

Rainy weather may have contributed to a head-on collision at the intersection of Rte. 3A and Sohier Street at 5:45 p.m. last Friday evening.

While attempting a left-hand turn onto Sohier Street, a pick-up truck driven by Samuel J. Spinzola, 76, of 25 Elm Ct. was struck head-on by the northbound Mazda driven by Gennadiy V. Paschenko, 51, of Hingham, police said.

Police said Spinzola, who was traveling southbound before he attempted the turn, could not judge the speed of the Mazda due to the wet conditions.

Paschenko sustained minor visible injuries and was transported to South Shore Hospital.

No one was cited in the accident, police said.

Just imagine that this was the closest you ever got to a home-cooked Thanksgiving dinner

This Thanksgiving, the reality is that more than 38% of those who will go hungry are children. That's why the Greater Boston Food Bank has teamed up with area manufacturers and Stop & Shop to raise more than $1,000,000 for local America's Second Harvest food banks.

Each time you visit Stop & Shop this holiday season, you'll have the chance to make a donation to the Thanks for Giving Program and help feed thousands of hungry men, women and children. It's a simple but powerful way you can share the joy of this holiday with those less fortunate.

$600K sewer budget hike easily passes vote

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Before residents had even settled into their seats at Monday's special Town Meeting, the last two agenda items had been cut, leaving just a pair of articles to discuss, with the second being a non-controversial article giving the town permission to enter into a waste disposal contract.

However, it was the first article that most of the 187 Cohasset residents braved the cold, raw night for.

But after a half hour of discussion, Town Meeting overwhelmingly voted to authorize another $600,000 to finish the Central Cohasset sewer project.

"I think people at the meeting recognized that costs are costs," Sewer Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil said afterwards. "I feel that from the comments I received after the meeting that they agreed a 4 percent overrun was entirely reasonable considering the complications of the project and rush of the schedule."

Prior town meeting votes had authorized $15.9 million for the project that installed sewers to an additional 800 homes in Central Cohasset, Newtonville and Lily Pond areas of town.

At an Oct. 10 selectmen's meeting, the sewer commission revealed the project had a $500,000 shortfall. According to the commission and Tutela Engineering, the project accumulated almost $800,000 in change orders, which ate through the $1 million contingency fund set up to cover overruns. The commission also blamed the shortfall on higher than anticipated police detail costs, additional engineering studies and needed aesthetic improvements. The amount needed to finish the project grew to $600,000 over the next couple of weeks.

Tutela officials said at an Oct. 10 selectmen's meeting, because some bills hadn't been recorded until the previous week, they hadn't realized the project was in financial trouble until the week before.

At Monday's Town Meeting, Vanderweil outlined the shortfall and what the additional money would be used for. He said the project added 13 miles of pipe underground, built a state-of-the-art treatment facility, added sewer service to more than 800 homes, installed seven pump stations around town, and completed the three- to four-year project in 15 months.

Vanderweil said contractor change orders, unanticipated costs and police details were the big culprits in the $600,000 shortfall. The sewer commission had originally budgeted a $1.2 million contingency and allowance fund, but the total of those three line items topped $1.7 million. Some of the change orders included $50,000 spent cleaning up gasoline contaminated soil on South Main Street, $81,000 on moving an asbestos water pipe on Route 3A, and $80,000 in dealing with the peat bog at the intersection of Ripley Road and Smith Place.

Vanderweil said, of the $600,000, almost half is earmarked to pay off contracts the town is "legally committed to," $150,000 will be spent on finishing the exterior of treatment plant, and $100,000 will go towards landscaping around town. Vanderweil also said $60,000 will be set aside to run pipe extensions to houses on Black Horse Lane that were excluded from the project.

Capital budget committee member Stacey Weaver said the group did back the article, but not without some minor reservations. "The money has been spent, promises have been made and in our view the overrun was not excessive," she said, but added, "We remained concerned about how much the town spends on capital projects as a whole in terms of its relationship to the percentage of the operating budget."

Dick Avery, speaking for the advisory committee, said the majority of the group also supported the article, but expressed concern over the lack of communication during the project between the sewer commission and the town.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said the board also supported the article but once again expressed his frustration at the project. "We're not happy with the way the project was managed or budgeted. But nevertheless, after venting, it is almost done, and it needs to be finished," he said. "We recommend we pass the article and get it done."

The initial selectmen's vote was 4-1 in favor of passing the article, but by meeting time, Merle Brown, the lone dissenter, had come around and made the board's vote unanimous. He said because the $600,000 would be placed under the care of Town Manager Mark Haddad, he felt he could vote for it. "Now I can get my two cents in," he said.

Broad questions about the finished project intertwined criticisms of poor management and a lack of oversight. The tone of the meeting made an abrupt turn when Dr. Ed Woods said he was thankful of the work the sewer commission does. "I am very grateful he [Vanderweil] volunteers his time, and I thank him very, very much. I think he has done a splendid job," he said, drawing a vigorous round of applause.

Former sewer commission chairman Ted Guild moved to end the discussion and the article was approved easily, with just a smattering of nos.

A third of the $600,000 will be borrowed through the state's revolving fund. The rest will be borrowed on the open bond market, according to Vanderweil. The town will be responsible for $42,600 in debt service year, to be split by the town's tax base and through user betterments.

Train talks are back on track thrown into a tailspin when MBTA officials announced they were backing away from the negotiating table. In September, Cohasset, along with other local towns that would be affected by restoration of commuter rail service, participated in a meeting with Governor Paul Cellucci, Secretary of Transportation Kevin Sullivan and Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand. At the meeting, Cellucci promised high-level meetings with Sullivan, Durand and the towns to etch out a mitigation agreement. Cohasset saw the fruits of this meeting recently when Sullivan met with selectmen in a closed-door session to discuss the sale of the Greenbush right-of-way. Gruber, Haddad and a sub-committee from the board of selectmen – Chairman Thomas Callahan and Michael Sullivan –met with MBTA officials on two other occasions.

Though Gruber and Haddad aren't able to comment on the details of the meetings, they both said they were happy with the progress, and hope to have a mitigation package to present to the full board in the near future.

"We've been negotiating in good faith, which is what we haven't had in a long time," Gruber said. "It remains to be seen where we are able to wind up."

"We have made substantial progress in discussing the fair market value of the right-of-way and other related matters," Haddad said, including the 26-item mitigation list selectmen approved in June as part of those related matters. "We entered into a 60-day period to try and solve anything."

The town met with the MBTA Wednesday as the Mariner went to press.

Haddad said he and Gruber have been given the town's authority to negotiate with the MBTA, but are unable to sign any type of deal with the MBTA. "Whatever final mitigation agreement we agree to, will be announced at a selectmen's meeting," Haddad explained. "We know the town's parameters and will bring something back to the board…They have to vote to accept it."

The article was originally drawn up for the Oct. 23 special Town Meeting as a way to gain some leverage in negotiating with the MBTA. By state law, the MBTA would need a two-thirds majority vote by both branches of the Legislature to take park land. Gruber and Haddad both adamantly denied the move to change the right-of-way's designation as obstructionist but rather as a way to ensure the town's interests are protected.

Haddad said officials were confident the article would have passed if it had been allowed to go forward.

"We had no fear of it failing. The planning board had endorsed it unanimously and we hadn't received any negative comments about it," he said.

Because sufficient progress had been made with the MBTA, Haddad said selectmen decided it was best to maintain good-faith and withdraw the article.

Greenbush is the proposed third leg of the Old Colony commuter rail line, that would end in Scituate and travel through Cohasset, Hingham and Weymouth. The Plymouth and Middleboro branches have already been restored. Cohasset has not had active passenger rail service since the 1950s have gone up 40 percent across the state, I'd say they've gone up 55 percent here, and that's without really stopping to look at the numbers."

Property taxes are on the rise

The benefit of increased property values is that higher values bring lower tax rates. The town is only able to raise the total tax levy 2-1/2 percent a year, and therefore Cohasset can only collect $16,123,131.80 in Fiscal 2001. Because the result is a fixed amount – providing the town isn't forced to vote for a Proposition 2 1/2 override – what makes up the rest of the equation changes. Though the tax rate drops, which it will by 50 cents this year, it is made up by higher property values, and thus people pay more in property taxes.

The problem, some selectmen fear, is that the taxes will rise disproportionally, according to how much your house is worth, or even how much your neighborhood is worth.

"Some people are going to see a 200-300 percent increase over the next year," said Sullivan. "That's going to have a huge impact on people."

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said some people could see their bills rise exponentially "because their neighbor's house sold for $3 million." But he said, "There's no way to avoid this, when the basis of your tax system is based on property values."

Town Manager Mark Haddad and Pooler said the town has attempted to update the assessed value of houses every year in order to "soften the blow" but admitted that some people could still take quite a blow next year. "The town's value doesn't increase equally," Haddad said. "Some will see a bigger increase because of the revaluations."

Pooler said the tax rate was partially offset because of $450,000 in recorded new growth last year. It was also mentioned that Cohasset is averaging between 14 and 15, $1million house sales per year.

According to the assessors office, the average priced home in Cohasset is $395,584. That house's tax bill will be $5,767.61, an increase of 7 percent from Fiscal 2000.

Selectmen also voted to keep the single tax rate system in Cohasset, as opposed to a split-rate that could create different tax rates for the commercial, industrial and personal property in town.

"We are far from the 25 percent minimum you should have to shift rates," Pooler said about the lack of a commercial tax base in town. According to Pooler, 93 percent of the town's tax levy comes from residential property taxes. Just 7 percent comes from commercial, industrial and personal property taxes. Out of the $16,123,131.80 slated to be collected in property taxes in Fiscal 2001, $14, 992,192 will come from residential property taxes, $913,176 from commercial, $57,448 from industrial and $160,314 from personal property taxes.

If the town had voted to shift more of the tax burden onto the backs of Cohasset businesses, selectmen said it would essentially drive business away.

According to Pooler's figures, if commercial property owners paid 110 percent of the residential rate, and owned property worth $500,000, their tax bill would increase by more than $1,000, while residential owners would see a $60 drop in their current bill.

"It really would create an unfair rate," said Pooler.

Callahan, said Holbrook, where he runs his law practice has a split-rate. Residential property owners pay $21/$1,000 and commercial owners pay $29/$1,000 of assessed valuation.

"It's really a sore spot in the community," he said.

Hingham's tax rate is $14.61 and Scituate's is $13.85. Both towns have a single tax rate.

IT'S HAPPENING

Hedlund victory

The Friends of Hedlund will hold "Victory 2000: A Salute to State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund" on Sunday, Dec. 3, from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham.

Suggested donations for the event are $35 per person and include a celebratory brunch. Tickets may be obtained by calling Polly Logan at (781) 383-0031.

As state senator from the Plymouth-Norfolk District, Hedlund represents a diverse constituency in parts of Braintree as well as Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate and Weymouth.

In addition to Logan, Victory 2000 Cohasset co-chairs include Janet Fogarty, Ted and Julie Guild, Hon. William Weeks and Rob Spofford. Joining the Friends of Senator Hedlund will be special invited state, county and local officials, including GOP Senate Leader Brian Lees, GOP House Leader Fran Marini, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, Sheriff Charles Decas and County Commissioner Robert Stone.

Holiday cards

Learn to make your own holiday cards on the computer. Class meets from 6:30-8:30 p.m. Nov. 28 & 29 or from 9 a.m.-1p.m., Dec. 2 at the South Shore Community Center. Participants need to be familiar with Windows and Microsoft Word. Cost is $60 for members, $65 for non-members. For information, call 383-0088.

Band jam

Cohasset Youth Resources announces a Band Jam for grades 9-12, at the Garage featuring four local bands on Saturday, Dec. 2, from 6:30 to 10:00 p.m. Performing will be SWEEPS, Last Man Standing, Eat the Path, and Underprivileged.

Doors open and tickets go on sale at 6 p.m. and the first group kicks off at 6:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 per person and due to space limitations, the number of available tickets is limited.

Bands will have CDs available for sale during intermission breaks. Refreshments will also be available at the Garage.

The bands are volunteering their performances and proceeds from this event will be utilized for future events and activities at the Garage.

The Garage is located in downtown Cohasset, directly behind the Red Lion Inn, next to the town parking lot.

Tree lighting

The South Shore Community Center, Rusty Skippers Marching Band and First Parish Church invite everyone to a community tree lighting and carol sing-a-long at 3 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 26 on the town common. The Rusty Skippers will play a selection of Christmas music around the town Christmas tree. At dusk the tree will be lit for the season.

Immediately following the tree-lighting, all are invited for cocoa and goodies at the Parish House of First Parish (23 North Main St.). In the event of truly inclement weather, the Skippers will play inside the Parish House. Donations of a non-perishable food items for the Cohasset Food Pantry would be appreciated.

The Rusty Skippers will also be playing at noon on Saturday, Dec. 2 (Village Fair) inside the Meeting House on the Common.

Christmas trees

First Parish in Cohasset is again offering fresh cut balsam Christmas trees to be picked up the day of the village fair in Cohasset, Dec. 2, or the following day. Trees are $35 for any size tree 5 to 9 feet, in thin, fat or full shapes. In addition to being a fund-raiser for the church, trees are donated to groups and people served by community organizations. Aerial photographer focuses on Science Center show

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Cohasset's Margot Cheel got into aerial photography when her two daughters flew the coop for college.

Now, three years later, Cheel is preparing for her first-ever photo show at the South Shore Natural Science Center. The show featuring her aerial photographs of the South Shore will begin Dec. 6 and will continue through Jan. 6.

"I'm really excited about it," Cheel said, "especially because it's my first show." She said there will be large prints and small prints featured at the show—all of them will be for sale.

I think one of the first times I shot pictures from the air was in the fall. You can't imagine how beautiful that is."

Cohasset photographer
Margot Cheel

Some of the aerial landscapes which will be featured at the show will include pictures taken high above Marshfield, Cohasset, Hull, Scituate, Duxbury, Norwell, and even World's End.

"I had to wait six months before I could take the aerial photos in Hull and at World's End," Cheel said. "Both locations are in Logan Airport's restricted air space, so I had to get permission from Logan to go up in a plane in that area. They called me a month ago, and told me I could go. I'll have a number of those photos at the show."

Cheel said she has always been into photography and other forms of art. In the late 1960s, she graduated from Middlebury College in Vermont with a degree in fine arts. But her passion

Taking the sting out of bee lessons

Howard Scott learns about 'the magic of bees' through hands-on research. He has been a beekeeper for the past 20 years.

Pembroke beekeeper's little book has wings

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

There's a unique book that people are buzzing about these days, thanks to Pembroke resident Howard Scott.

Scott, a beekeeper, has had 10,000 additional copies of his book called "Bee Lessons" printed. His first printing which included 3,000 copies of the book was published in April 1999, but they flew off the shelves.

With swarms of folks reading it, Scott is getting some great responses to his small book—not only from South Shore residents, but from people all over the world.

Scott said his bee book is for everyone, not just bee experts.

"My book is about the magic and wonder of bees," he said, "and if you stop, take your time, and actually look at a mass of bees, you'll see things that weren't there before. That's fascinating to everyone, not just bee lovers. I call it 'the little book that makes you think about life.'"

Paul Berg, a resident of Norway bought more than two dozen copies of Scott's little bee book and wrote him recently to say why. In a letter to Scott, Berg explained that the bee is the mascot of Barums Verk Bees — an amateur basketball

Making the most of mortgage options

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

First-time homebuyers looking for a mortgage these days do more than walk into their local bank branch. For savvy consumers, finding a mortgage means searching the Internet, working the phones and shopping around.

Homebuyers, especially those looking for their first home, spend nearly as much time looking for a loan as they do looking for a house. There are dozens of loan types and hundreds of loan programs available from banks, brokers, lenders, finance companies and even the federal government.

"There are lots of programs out there, especially for the first-time homebuyer. And there are lots of changes happening, so people need to ask questions," said Carol Bulman, president of Conway Financial Services.

Bulman said Federal Housing Assistance programs require as little as three percent down payment from the buyers, where closing costs and portions of other down payment costs can come in the form of a gift from parents or other sources, as long as the buyers put down a percentage of the down payment themselves.

"That's a popular program because there's some flexibility in qualifying. That's important, because often first-time buyers may

Pie pastry 101

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Anyone who has ever made a pie knows the problem. In a word, it's the crust. It can be tough, crumbly, dry, wet, crackly, or rubbery. It can shrink so much that there is hardly any room for filling. It can be hard to roll out, the dough so sticky that it is impossible to keep it together on the work surface. It can be so sticky that no matter how much flour you add, the dough still ends up sticking to the pin. As I discovered during testing, tender, easy-to-roll-out pie dough starts with the recipe itself.

After reviewing and baking a dozen pie dough recipes, I decided that the major consideration is a dough that rolls out readily and is easy to fit into a pie plate. Next, the recipe ingredients ought to contain only simple pantry items. I have little patience for recipes that call for special flours or ingredients that don't measurably affect the final result. Finally, the process of making the dough ought to be as simple as possible: the home cook should not have to jump through hoops. After months of testing, here are my conclusions:

Butter versus vegetable shortening (Crisco): Butter adds flavor to a pie crust, and vegetable shortening makes it flaky. One reason that vegetable shortening is relatively foolproof is that it is stable at varying room temperatures. Butter, on the other hand, melts when it gets too warm, which is disastrous since this turns the dough soft and sticky.

Ratio of fat to flour: For most pies, I find that 10 tablespoons of fat (butter and vegetable shortening) to 1 1/4 cups flour is best. For prebaked pie shells, I reduce the fat to a total of eight tablespoons. This lower ratio produces a shell that is less likely to "melt" or shrink during prebaking.

Refrigerating versus freezing: I have found over the years that refrigerated butter turns soft rather quickly when it is cut into pieces to be used in pie pastry. For this reason, I agree with Rose Levy Beranbaum, author of "The Pie and Pastry Bible," who suggests freezing the cut-up butter pieces before cutting them into the flour. I found that 15 minutes in the freezer to be ample.

Pastry versus bleached versus all-purpose flour: The notion of special flours (pastry, bleached all-purpose) for pie doughs makes little sense to me. There is not a great difference in the final product and, since most people have only all-purpose at home, I see no point in using anything else.

The question of vinegar: Many cooks claim that the acid in vinegar helps to prevent the gluten in the flour from toughening. I tested this head to head and found that the pastry was slightly lighter, although the improvement was marginal. The big drawback with vinegar, however, is that it leads to rapid browning of the pie pastry, which is a serious problem. I say forget the vinegar and make life simple.

What about baking powder? This is another ingredient often thrown into pie pastry doughs. I made two pies, one with baking powder and one without, and found that it makes little difference.

Is sugar necessary? Yes. Without any sugar, I find pie pastry to be dull tasting. Sugar brings out flavors and makes the pastry more lively.

When should the water be added? It was very clear to me after the testing that liquid should never be added to a food processor. You never know how much you will need, which can easily lead to overprocessing.

How much water should be added? The single biggest mistake home cooks make is failing to add enough water to the dough. Cookbook authors who warn about the dangers of excessive water are doing a great disservice. Their fear is that a wet dough will be tougher. Although I have found only small variations in tenderness based on water content, the more important issue is whether the dough can be rolled out in the first place. Besides, a wet dough can be fixed easily by adding a bit more flour. A dry dough is a disaster: it cannot be rolled out.

Eggs and egg yolks: A basic American pie dough really does not need an egg, which produces a somewhat sturdier dough, although it also makes the dough considerably harder to roll out.

What about lard? Most older American pie pastry recipes call for lard. When tested with today's supermarket lard, however, I found that the crust tasted like bacon.

All of this detective work led to the following simple recipe. Using 1 1/4 cups of flour as the basic amount for a one-crust pie, I used 1/2 teaspoon of salt, 2 tablespoons sugar, 5 tablespoons chilled Crisco (any brand should be fine), and 5 tablespoons chilled unsalted butter. While this is a heavy ratio of fat to flour, it's also what makes this recipe relatively foolproof. Be sure to use plenty of water, and allow the dough to rest in the refrigerator for at least two hours before rolling.

FOOLPROOF FOOD PROCESSOR PIE PASTRY

Be sure to use unsalted butter and enough water so that the dough easily forms a ball-there should be no bits of flour or dough left in the sides of the bowl. If you are making a two-crust pie, double the recipe. If you are prebaking the crust, use only 4 tablespoons each of butter and Crisco. To prebake a pie shell, refrigerate it for 40 minutes and then freeze it for another 20. Cover with foil, fill with beans or pie weights, and bake at 375 degrees for 21 minutes. Remove foil and bake for 5 minutes longer if the shell must go back into the oven with the filling. Bake for 12 to 15 minutes, or until very brown, if the filling requires no baking.

For a single-crust 8- or 9-inch pie
5 tablespoons cold unsalted butter
1 1/4 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons sugar
5 tablespoons cold all-vegetable shortening (Crisco)
4 to 5 tablespoons ice water

1. Cut butter into 3/4-inch pieces and place in freezer for 15 minutes. Mix flour, salt, and sugar in a food processor fitted with steel blade. Place the Crisco in 1-tablespoon lumps into the food processor along with the frozen butter pieces. Pulse 8 to 12 times (1-second pulses) or until the dough appears slightly yellow, pebbly in texture, and the butter is reduced to very small pieces, the size of tiny peas or smaller. Check dough after 5 pulses and every pulse thereafter. Turn mixture into a medium bowl.

2. Sprinkle 3 tablespoons of water over the mixture. With blade of a large rubber spatula, use a folding motion to mix, then press down on dough with broad side of spatula until dough sticks together, adding up to 2 tablespoons more water if dough will not come together. Work slowly, mixing dough to evenly distribute the water. This should take about 1 minute. The dough should be very wet and sticky at this point. It is better to add too much water than too little. Dust lightly with flour, shape dough into a ball with your hands, then flatten into a 4-inch wide disc. Wrap in plastic, and refrigerate for at least 2 hours before rolling. —

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 15

This day holds high potential for productivity. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. The green light is on for new beginnings across the board. Influences are particularly favorable for making decisions and negotiating deals regarding land, property, home improvement. The moon continues to travel in the sign Cancer. Share a special meal this evening with family and/or close friends.

THURSDAY, NOV. 16

Get an early start to this day. For favorable planetary influences, you must launch ventures before 9:30 a.m., when the Cancer moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn and becomes inactive. In addition, Mars and Jupiter interact at 9:38 a.m., generating high energy and enthusiasm. The remainder of the day brings a time to finish old business, handle routine chores and errands. The moon enters Leo at 1:19 p.m. and aligns with Neptune and Mercury in the evening. Let fun and games top your agenda.

FRIDAY, NOV. 17

The moon continues to travel in playful Leo. This is a good day for working on projects that require input, cooperation from others. If you can, take extra time out for yourself, to relax and enjoy favorite leisure activities. A lunar polarity to Uranus at 6:12 p.m. may disrupt the flow of the day. Avoid rigid time schedules. Don't be a hermit tonight. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SATURDAY, NOV. 18

An alignment of the sun and Saturn takes the spotlight this weekend. It brings an emphasis on self-discipline, attention to duty and responsibility. Tackle jobs you've been putting off and get them out of the way. Zero in on commitments you've made or debts you've incurred and fulfill them. Hard work and self-sacrifice will pay off. The Leo moon aligns with the sun and Saturn until 12:03 p.m., when it becomes inactive. At 4:15 p.m. the moon enters discriminating Virgo.

SUNDAY, NOV. 19

Yesterday's planetary influences continue today. The combination of a Virgo moon and sun/Saturn polarity prompt you to roll up your sleeves and stay busy. Matters of a business or financial nature can no longer be swept under the rug. Stay calm and keep the avenues of communication open, particularly between 11:17 a.m.-2:17 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. You can initiate new activities anytime after 2:30 p.m. Get back on track with physical fitness, diets and exercise programs.

MONDAY, NOV. 20

A Virgo moon sets the stage for another productive day. Influences are prime for handling matters that may be tedious and require attention to detail. You can get them out of the way. It is best to initiate new ventures before 3:57 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. At 6:45 p.m. the Virgo moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive. Influences turn around completely at 8:35 p.m., when the moon enters social Libra.

TUESDAY, NOV. 21

A Libra moon sets the stage for a pleasant day. Zero in on people-related projects; spend extra time with friends, colleagues or on the internet. Share ideas; listen and learn from others. The sun enters Sagittarius at 7:20 p.m., remaining there until December 21. An applying alignment of Venus and Mars may spark romantic fireworks this evening. Ride the love boat to exotic ports.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 22

At 3:18 a.m. the Libra moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A creative Venus/Mars alignment comes together at 8:43 a.m. No major planetary activity occurs after that. This is a day to catch up on unfinished business, handle routine chores and errands, clean and reorganize.

Kick back, relax; enjoy favorite leisure activities and friends this evening.

Curtain call for the public

Norwell's Company Theatre hosts open house

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Norwell's Company Theatre is hosting an open house Saturday and everyone's invited. Visitors can tour the community theater and get a preview of its ambitious upcoming season of concerts and dramatic performances. Theater goers can also save a buck or two by purchasing season tickets before the season gets underway.

"They have a great season of shows and concerts coming up," said Company Theatre spokesperson Steve White. "During this weekend's open house, the public will be able to get to see a few sights they can rarely see, and they'll also be given the opportunity to save some money."

White said "theater club passes" for the Company Theatre will be sold for $85 on Saturday, whereas the passes usually cost $95. White said buying one theater club pass gives an individual the opportunity to see all five of the Company Theatre's five theatrical seasonal performances for a reduced price. And furthermore, buying a theater club pass also gives one the opportunity to see concerts at the facility for a reduced price.

White added the reduced-cost theater club passes will only be available by going to the open house and obtaining them, as opposed to over the phone.

The company's five theatrical performances for 2001 include "Forbidden Broadway (Feb.)," "La Cage Aux Folles (March)," "Footloose (summer)," "A Streetcar Named Desire(fall)," and "Company For The Holidays" in Dec., 2001.

Concerts at the Company Theatre will include such artists as The Bacon Brothers featuring actor Kevin Bacon, Juice Newton (famous for the song "Angel of The Morning"), folk artist Cheryl Wheeler, Roomful of Blues, Celtic rock band The Prodigals, Sandy Martin, The Sally Taylor Band (James Taylor's daughter), Doors tribute band The Soft Parade, and even a show called Gospel Music Celebration.

"I think some of the biggest draws theatrically will be Footloose and La Cage Aux Folles," White said. "But we're getting a good feeling about all of them, and there's also a lot of buzz about the musical line up for the season. I'm pretty sure all of the theatrical performances will sell out, and I believe the concerts are going to do really well."

White said if people decide to buy theater club passes after Saturday's open house, prices will go back up to $95 per pass.

"It's a good idea to get them early," he said. "You'll be getting a great deal."

For more information on the open house, call the Company Theatre at (781) 871-2787 or log onto the website at www.companytheatre.com.

The Bacon Brothers Band is just one of the many musical acts lined up for the Company Theatre's upcoming season.

to get off the ground and take pictures began just three years ago.

"I'm a single mom," she said. "When my second daughter left for college, I was an empty nester, and I felt like it was a huge change for me. I had always been drawn to flying, but as I drove home from dropping my second daughter off at college, I was getting weird signals."

Those signals included seeing a label on her daughter's shirt which read "Kitty Hawk," and noticing small airports more and more.

"I asked myself, 'why do I keep noticing these things?,'" she said. It was almost right after those signals appeared that Cheel decided to take flying lessons at Marshfield Airport. Now, she is on the verge of getting her private pilot's license.

But about a year and a half ago, in the midst of her pilot training, a friend of Cheel's asked her to take some aerial photos while she was in flight.

"I went up in the plane, took pictures, and had so much fun," Cheel said. "I was delighted with the results. I think one of the first times I shot pictures from the air was in the fall. You can't imagine how beautiful that is." Cheel said when she goes up to take pictures, someone else pilots the plane.

"I love doing both things—flying the plane and taking pictures," she said. "I do it as much as I can. It's a year-round thing, but the only thing you have to look out for is the weather. Ever since the first time I went up and started taking pictures, I've loved it. It helps that I'm not afraid of small planes."

Even though her aerial photos have given her personal gratification, she said she also uses her skills to conduct business with local realtors.

"Having certain pictures of homes taken from the air has been very helpful for a lot of realtors around the area," she said. "These days, when I go up in a plane to take pictures, I'm usually on assignment for one of them. Certain homes look so beautiful from the air."

But whether she is up there for herself or for a client, Cheel gets excited every time. Being up in the air has become a part of who she is.

"It's just so beautiful up there," she said. "But that's my artistic side talking. Honestly, when I'm just up there concentrating on flying a plane, I don't get to see a lot of the beauty around me because I have to be thinking about what I'm doing. That's what makes the opportunities to take pictures from up there so special."

"I also love aerial photography because I get the chance to capture the sights I see from above and make them available to the public. Not a lot of people get the chance to see what the world looks like from thousands of feet in the air. It's just something they don't normally see."

Cheel said after her upcoming show at the science center concludes, she'll consider doing some other shows, but she said she'll think about that later on.

"I want to get through this one first," she said jokingly. "In the future, I've been thinking that I'd like to do an aerial photography show in conjunction with certain preservation groups." She added she would also love to be able to go take pictures in Italy when she gets a chance.

"Doing what I'm doing now takes a lot of patience," Cheel said. "So I know I have to keep working at it. But I think people will be able to look at the world from a different perspectives when they look at my photos."

For information on Cheel's show call the South Shore Natural Science Center at (781) 659-2559 or call Cheel at (781) 383-9184. Cheel can also be contacted by e-mail at Mcheel@mediaone.net.

Taking the sting out of bee lessons

club in Norway.

"The bee is our mascot, and on our Web site, we give our readers one piece of bee information as often as possible. I bought 25 copies of 'Bee Lessons' in Harvard Book Store (in Boston) this spring—it's both humorous and educational for bee lovers," Berg wrote.

Howard is thrilled with the national and international responses to his book, and he is also optimistic about the book's growing level of recognition.

"Eighty stores in New England carry the book now," he said.

"Most of them are bookstores, but some gift shops around the region also carry them. I've already sold about 2,500 of 10,000 that were just printed." He added his book is also available on the Internet at Amazon.com.

Scott writes what he knows about. An avid beekeeper, Scott is also one of the prominent members of the Plymouth County Beekeepers, an organization which has been in existence since 1963.

Scott said the Plymouth County Beekeepers offer "bee school" classes at the Reed Community Center in Kingston at different times of the year. He said the classes offer the public lively lessons on how to keep bees, and how to observe them. The next set of classes will begin Jan. 23.

Scott's idea to write "Bee Lessons" came out of his teaching many of those bee school sessions, and also out of all of his hands-on work with bees.

"When I move to Pembroke 20 years ago, I had the idea of getting into beekeeping," he said. "I've always been into mini societies. So, I guess it was at that time that I bought my first bee hive."

But Scott knew he could not just take up the hobby without any guidance or instruction. At that time, Scott had heard about an organization called Plymouth County Beekeepers.

"I started going to their meetings and met quite a few people," he said. "I kept getting more and more interested in the subject of bees at the same time. Eventually, I became a member of the organization."

The years passed, and Scott started teaching some of the bee school classes, and he also kept on raising bees at his own home. He was even starting to do things like make his own honey, which he still does today. Scott said he and the Plymouth County Beekeepers always set up a booth at the Marshfield fair and sell different bee-oriented items.

"About three years ago, while we were at the fair, I realized we had no written material to give away to the public."

Scott said he felt very strongly about that subject, so he immediately started thinking of different ideas for bee books. It wasn't long before Scott came up with an idea and wrote the book. It was a short book, but he felt it said what it had to say.

"(Publishers) weren't interested in it," he said. "So I took it into my own hands, and put together 50 of the books myself by hand."

The following year at the Marshfield Fair, Scott sold his homemade books for $3 each.

"By God, I sold every book," Scott said. "That was when I spent $3,000 to have 3,000 of the books professionally printed in April of 1999."

When he received the professionally-published books, the first thing he did was give 350 of them away.

"There are 350 different bee clubs around the country," he said. "I sent a copy of 'Bee Lessons' to each one." Scott also started sending copies of the books to various newspapers, which got the book even more attention. He then started marketing the book to local bookstores, and other bookstores and shops around the state.

"It started to really sell," he said. "Then, by April of 2000, I had another 10,000 printed because of the demand for the book. My wife Martha an I are staggered by the book's success. I've hit a vein and people have responded to it. In all the writing that I have done, this is the most thrilling thing that has ever happened to me."

Scott noted he currently writes a column for the American Bee Journal and he also writes periodic articles for American Dry Cleaner and other publications. He also works as a copywriter for Wearguard in Norwell.

"Writing articles is one thing, but it's amazing what you can do when you jot down words in a little book," Scott said. "Not everyone is enthused as I am about bees, but I'm amazed at the growing level of interest. Again, 'Bee Lessons' is also a book about life that everyone can enjoy. When most people look at a mass of bees in a hive, they don't know that each bee has a very specific job. There's worker bees, transporter bees, processing bees, construction bees, guards, and even a queen. There's a very specific division of labor."

"It's not just about seeing a mass of bees. It's about being a good observer and coming into more wisdom. I just think I'm one person who really grooves to that kind of magic. I love trying to figure out what the bees are thinking."

For more information on Scott's book or bee school classes at the Reed Community Center, call Scott at (781) 293-9027. "Bee Lessons" can be found at bookstores like Bookworld in Pembroke, Booksmith at the Hanover Mall, and Westwinds Bookshop in Duxbury.

Making the most of mortgage options

have some problems in their credit history," she said.

Bulman also said there are private programs available that offer 100 percent, even as much as 103 percent borrowing. But for those programs, perfect credit and a solid job future are needed.

"Probably less than half of the buyers out there can qualify for that loan. But for the right person, it can be a good program," said Bulman.

Bulman said she recommends buyers shopping for a loan come in for a face-to-face meeting with a loan officer to find out what their options are and hopefully get pre-qualified for a loan even before they find a home.

"A good loan officer will pull your credit history, do the numbers and tell you what you can afford. It's a good idea now to get yourself pre-approved, or at least pre-qualfied, for a mortgage before you even find a home "

Carol Bulman, president of Conway Financial Services

"A good loan officer will pull your credit history, do the numbers and tell you what you can afford. It's a good idea now to get yourself pre-approved, or at least pre-qualfied, for a mortgage before you even find a home," said Bulman.

Bulman said that in today's sellers' market, competition among buyers can be fierce and the difference between your offer on a home and another can be the pre-approved stamp on a buyer. "Particularly in a multi-buyer situation, it's important to have that pre-approval status backing you up," she said. In addition to the FHA and 100 percent financing loans, some other loan programs to ask about:

- The US Department of Veterans Affairs allows qualified veterans to buy a house costing up to $203,000 with no down payment, with the qualification guidelines often more flexible than those for either FHA or conventional programs. To find out if you're eligible, check with your nearest VA regional office.
- State and local programs often cater to the first-time buyer of low or moderate income, sometimes if they buy a home in a certain area. These programs typically offer very attractive loan terms, such as low down payment or low interest rates, to first-time buyers who meet specified income guidelines. Some state and local programs may also offer down payment and closing cost assistance. Area housing authorities, such as Quincy Community Action, can offer information on such programs.
- Home renovation programs are available through both the FHA and Fannie Mae, where borrowers can add the amount necessary for home improvements to their mortgage. The FHA 203(K) program offers the advantages of an FHA loan, according to Bulman, along with a renovation component. For example, a buyer who wants to purchase a $100,000 home finds there are $25,000 in renovation costs. Using a FHA rehab loan, the buyer would be qualified based upon $125,000 minus a down payment as low as 3 percent of the total sale price, renovation costs and closing costs.

Bulman said that changes are coming, too, with the new year. The FHA has planned to lower mortgage insurance costs to the consumer to stay competitive with private lenders. And lenders are stretching their borrowing ratios as the real estate market tightens, leading to higher home prices. Therefore, lenders are allowing homebuyers to borrow more, keeping pace with the current price trends.

"There's a lot of information out there, but buyers these days know a lot more. They're not coming in totally uninformed. I think the entire process is becoming demystified," she said.

IN BRIEF

Conway opens sales center in Abington

There was standing room only as local officials and friends gathered last month to celebrate the grand opening of Jack Conway & Co.'s newest sales center on Route 123 in Abington.

Chairman Jack Conway and President Richard F. Cahill announced the opening of the office and the appointment of its manager, Margaret MacNeil. Approximately 100 people attended the celebration at the new location, across from the U.S. Post Office at 27 Brockton Avenue.

"We're very excited about coming to Abington," Conway said. "We've been serving the community for many years through our Hanson, Whitman and Brockton sales offices, but it's time we established a hometown office right here in Abington."

Founded in 1957 Jack Conway & Co. has 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The organization recently was named the 77th largest realty company in the United States by Realtor Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

Plant fruit-bearing trees for fabulous fall and winter color

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Shimmering rays of sunlight streamed through broken clouds igniting the brilliantly colored leaves of a magnificent Bradford pear as I ventured forth across my soggy landscape to continue preparations for the inevitable arrival of wintry weather. A sense of urgency guided my steps as hard frosts, snow and frozen ground are sure to limit my outdoor activities long before I accomplish my long list of goals for this fall season.

Green
thumbs up

Despite my efforts to prioritize my projects, I rarely complete any task before beginning another. The simple transplanting of a singular plant leads to the reconstruction of an entire garden. My efforts to plant several dozen potted perennials results in the creation of yet another new border. I take one step forward and three steps back, but such is the plight of a passionate, compulsive gardener.

The majority of our deciduous trees and shrubs have shed their multicolored robes, yet the foliage of a few typically enduring species linger well into the month of November. Beech, willow, pears, oaks and dogwoods provide splashes of vibrant reds, yellows and golds or a subtle backdrop of rich, lustrous mahogany tones to the autumn landscape, but in a few short weeks the dying embers of another growing season will lie beneath these trees' bare branches as gardeners turn their attention to the holiday season.

Many of these woody plants offer distinctive, attractive silhouettes when undressed. Others display appealing patterns, colors or textures on their trunks or peeling, exfoliating bark which provide winter interest. Those which produce fruit may go unnoticed until their foliage has fallen, the color of their berries intensifying as temperatures drop. As their fruits ripen, most fruit-bearing trees and shrubs attract birds and wildlife during the fall and winter months. Cedar waxwings, mockingbirds, robins, finches, bluebirds, and flickers are just a few species likely to partake of these colorful berries.

The planting of fruit-bearing trees will greatly enhance the winter landscape.

Ornamental crab apples (Malus spp.) are an attractive, adaptable and diversified group of small fruiting trees. Tolerant of a wide range of soils, crab apples burst forth each spring with a glorious profusion of bloom, clothing the entire tree in pink, white or red blossoms. In late summer and autumn, fruits ripen in shades of vibrant red, yellow or purple. Those bearing smaller fruits are more likely to appeal to birds although flocks of robins and cedar waxwings may strip the entire tree of its flavorful berries before winter arrives. Older varieties of crab apples may suffer from several diseases which may lead to premature leaf drop but newer cultivars provide greatly improved disease resistance.

The dogwood family includes several handsome members which are attractive in all seasons. The popular flowering dogwood (Corpus florida) displays magnificent pink, red or white flower bracts in spring and glowing, scarlet foliage in fall accentuated by clusters of brilliant, shiny red berries which usually disappear early in the season, courtesy of voracious squirrels, robins, catbirds, mockingbirds and flickers. Its horizontal branching provides a distinctive silhouette which adds grace and beauty to the winter landscape. The Korean dogwood (C. kousa) which blooms later in spring after the foliage has emerged, also produces vibrant russet autumn leaves accompanied by dangling, fleshy red fruits resembling large raspberries.

The showy, flaming orange-red berries of the mountain ash (Sorbus spp.) brighten the autumn landscape even before its attractive, divided foliage changes to its colorful autumn garb of red and yellow. Dense clusters of white flowers appear in spring. The mountain ash prefers full sun and moist soils, is tolerant of pollution and is an ideal specimen for gardens as its small leaflets enable sunlight to filter through to the plants and grass which may reside beneath its branches. Its fruits are favored by numerous species of birds including cedar waxwings, catbirds and bluebirds.

The Hawthorn family (Crataegus spp.) offers a number of attractive varieties which produce clusters of pink or white flowers in spring followed by stunning red fruits in fall. Leaf drop due to cedar apple rust or other diseases, particularly in damp summers, tends to be a perennial problem for older varieties. As with the crab apple family, newer cultivars tend to be more disease resistant. Most types require careful handling and pruning as they sport significant thorns. Their dense, forked branching habit makes them especially suitable for nesting birds. Their bountiful quantities of shiny red fruits persist well into the winter serving as a continuing source of food for numerous feathered species.

The planting of fruit-bearing trees will greatly enhance the winter landscape. If possible, position those which offer winter beauty where they can be observed from inside your home so that you may enjoy their splendor throughout the chilly months to come and be entertained by the antics of birds and wildlife as they partake of nature's bounty.

Due diligence could have avoided financial woes

BY ANTHONY SUMMERS
CORRESPONDENT

You've seen them on TV, those self-appointed hucksters who will show you how to make a fortune in real estate without investing any of your own money. Seem too good to be true? This question can be answered in more ways than one as is illustrated by the Superior Court case of Pasceri vs. Bastille.

Background

In 1985, Stephen Pasceri, the plaintiff, was the manager of two rental properties owned by Arthur and Patricia Bastille, his aunt and uncle, the defendants. That year in 1985 was a boom time for real estate, and it seemed like anybody and everybody was making money. Not wanting to be left at the station, Stephen and Patricia Pasceri bought a ticket to ride the real estate train to a town called Financial Security.

After brief negotiations, the Bastilles agreed to sell the four-unit building at Ten Hawthorne Street for $180,000. The Bastilles were so generous, they even loaned their nephew the $25,000 down payment. Overjoyed with the opportunity to own income property with no money down, he closed quickly. There was no time for attorneys or minimal due diligence. Pasceri simply inquired of this uncle: Were there any problems he should know about?

Relying on the belief that his uncle and benefactor would not mislead him, he closed on the property. Everything was fine until 1998, when Pasceri received a notice from the City of Worcester Department of Code Enforcement.

It seemed that Ten Hawthorne Place was only zoned as a single family and had been illegally converted to four rental units. The cost of bringing the building up to code was overwhelming to the extent that the Pasceris were unable to keep up with their mortgage payments which eventually resulted in the sale of the property at public auction in July 1999.

As the Pasceris saw their retirement and 15 years of hard work disappear with the snap of the conductor's or auctioneer's red flag, their view turned to Florida whence the Bastilles had retired. Hoping to recoup their losses, the Pasceris brought suit against Uncle Arthur and Auntie Patricia, claiming breach of contract and fraud and deceit.

ANTHONY SUMMERS

Discussion of law

Among the several defenses mounted by the Bastilles was that MGL Ch 260, the statute of limitations, had expired. The statute of limitations for breach of contract is six years, three years for deceit. The limitation period begins to run from the time the cause of action occurs, "which was when (the Pasceris) knew or should have known of the facts...giving rise to the claim."

Decision

Pasceri argued that he did not actually know of the problem until 1999, the date of the notice from the Worcester Department of Code Enforcement. Notwithstanding the above to be true, the law sets the date of knowledge as when Pasceri reasonably should have known.

Had Pasceri merely taken a trip to the Worcester Building Department prior to closing in 1985, he would have discovered the occupancy problem prior to closing. The violation was "inherently knowable" in 1985, and therefore, the six-year period of limitations began to run in 1985.

As a result, the failure to commence litigation on or before six years subsequent to the 1985 closing, resulted in the case action being dismissed, since the statute of limitations had run out. Pasceri loses, the case was dismissed.

Legal advice

There was no good reason for Pasceri to be unaware of the zoning violation since a quick trip to the Building Department would have described the problem. Basic due diligence which precedes the purchase of income property requires a trip to the Building Department to ascertain compliance with zoning.

Legal occupancy is a "caveat emptor" (let the buyer beware) issue. A buyer will be held responsible for what he/she could have and should have known. In this case Pasceri had no one to blame but himself.

Which of These Costly Homeseller Mistakes Will You Make When You Sell Your Home?

A new report has just been released which reveals 10 costly mistakes that most homeowners make when selling their home, and a system that can help you sell your home fast and for the most amount of money.

This industry report shows clearly how the traditional ways of selling homes have become increasingly less and less effective in today's market. The fact of the matter is that fully three quarters of homesellers don't get what they want for their home and become disillusioned and - worse - financially disadvantaged when they put their home on the market.

As this report uncovers, most homesellers make 10 deadly mistakes that cost them literally thousands of dollars. The good news is that each and every one of these mistakes is entirely preventable.

In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "The System to Get Your Home Sold Fast and For Top Dollar."

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your free copy of this report, call 1-800-581-1081 and enter ID#12085. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Granddad thinks airline has not done enough

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

George Hobica

Q. In August my 10-year-old granddaughter was on a Southwest Airlines flight from San Jose, Calif., to St. Louis with a stop in Salt Lake City. She was not to deplane in Salt Lake City, but a flight attendant took it upon herself to take my granddaughter off the plane and alter her transportation tag to make it look like her destination was Salt Lake City instead of St. Louis. She spent almost three hours alone in the airport wondering where her mom was and what was going on before the airline put her in contact with her mother in St. Louis.

The airline has admitted to many errors in this case, such as not making sure the transportation tag was completely filled out and signed by the delivering party (in this case, her dad) and taking her off the plane without double-checking the transportation tag or her baggage claim tag. Although the airline admits these and other errors in this case and has refunded the cost of her ticket and provided her meals while waiting, we feel that they must be held more accountable for endangering a minor. Any information that you can provide would be greatly appreciated.

A. The situation you described is indeed serious and obviously could have had even more dire consequences besides the anguish of both mother and daughter. I'm not sure what else you want Southwest to do, but since you're not satisfied with their gestures so far you might want to consult competent legal counsel at this point. Although thousands of kids travel solo every year, your experience shows that there is some risk involved. Readers are forewarned.

Q. We booked a cruise on Renaissance cruise lines and booked air to Tahiti through the cruise line on Hawaiian Airlines. Our plane had mechanical problems, so we missed the first two days of the cruise. Everyone on the ship, even those who didn't miss the first two days, received a $150 per person shipboard credit (to apply against other charges such as shore excursions). But we feel that we should get a refund for the days we missed. We did buy insurance (from Worldwide Insurance Services) but they won't cover this situation. What else can we do?

A. Missing the boat is an all-too-common problem and every cruise line handles it differently, so it's a good idea to ask what your line's policy is so you can be prepared. Renaissance claims that they also offered passengers a $600 per passenger credit towards a future cruise, which isn't much use if you're not planning on cruising again on the same line.

There's good news, however. After checking with the cruise line, I discovered that the cause of your flight delay wasn't mechanical problems, but rather a fuel strike in Tahiti that prevented the plane from operating on schedule. I also checked with your insurance company and the only two airline-related delays they cover are — you're in luck —weather and fuel strikes. They need you to send documentation stating how much you paid for your cruise so that they can give you a pro-rated cash refund. Had your flight been cancelled due to mechanical problems or any other reason, however, you would not have been covered, which I find disturbing. Why can't travel insurance policies just cover their customers — period — without all these loopholes?

You may remember the question from a reader who bought two tickets on Air Canada for more than $800 from Cheap Tickets, a consolidator, and couldn't use them because of last minute health issues. Cheap Tickets refused to refund her money, telling her that she should just tear up the tickets. Luckily, Air Canada was more sympathetic. They agreed to let her use the tickets on a future flight. Hats off to Air Canada.

"The process taught me a good lesson," the reader writes. "One, deal with a reputable travel agency, or use the airlines directly. Two, always get travel insurance!"

Cheap Tickets is in fact reputable; but they're also inflexible when it comes to changes or cancellations.

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

Holiday charity fund-raiser set for Nov. 30

A holiday festival performance of Charles Dickens' classic story "A Christmas Carol" will benefit the MainSpring House homeless shelter and The Charity Guild food pantry next month.

The special show, hosted by the Jack Conway Company, will be held Thursday, Nov. 30, at 7:30 p.m. at the Company Theatre (formerly the Nickerson Theater) in Norwell.

Tickets are $50 per person and the price includes an invitation to a pre-show reception at the theater beginning at 7 p.m. All proceeds from the performance will go to the two South Shore charitable organizations.

The Brockton Coalition for the Homeless operates MainSpring House in Brockton, which provides shelter, food, educational programs and counseling to individuals and families in need. MainSpring houses as many as 60 homeless individuals per night; Conway House in Middleboro provides shelter for13 homeless families in a residence on East Grove Street.

The Charity Guild Inc. is a Brockton-based non-profit organization that provides food, clothing and donated household items to low-income individuals and families throughout the region. The group operates a food pantry and thrift store on North Main Street. It receives no state funding and pays for its programs through the generous contributions of its members, area residents and local businesses.

Requests for tickets can be sent with payment to MainSpring/Charity Guild, c/o Jack Conway & Co., 137 Washington St., Norwell, 02061. For more information, call Chris Haraden at Conway, (781) 871-0080, Ext. 316.

Middle-high school to do its homework

Accreditation process gets underway

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For the next 20 months, Cohasset Middle/High School teachers and administrators will be busy behind the scenes giving the school a complete academic check-up in order to prepare for its accreditation visit in the fall of 2002.

Already committees are being formed and studies prepared as the school gets ready for its ultimate final exam administered by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges.

"It's important for the community to know their school system is judged worthwhile by an outside team of evaluators."

— Michael Gill, co-chairman of self-study process

"It's important for the community to know their school system is judged worthwhile by an outside team of evaluators," said Dr. Michael Gill, the school's Health Education Coordinator, and co-chairman, along with Marie Schlieff, of the self-study process. "It's something I believe not just from an administrative viewpoint, that every classroom teacher takes it [the accreditation process] very seriously."

Gill said whether or not a school is accredited is looked at carefully by those reviewing college applications.

At last Thursday's school committee meeting, Gill and Schlieff kicked the process off officially by presenting the board with a new mission statement and set of "expectations for student learning."

"The mission of the Cohasset Middle-High School is to provide educational experiences that prepare

MCAS results are in School officials to analyze scores

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The nail-biting wait is over – the MCAS results are in.

But now in the weeks ahead, the school department and parents will analyze the results to determine what they mean about Cohasset curriculum and individual student performance.

"The students did very well," said Supt. Edward Malvey about the overall results.

MCAS testing is supposed to help school districts align their curriculum so that certain subject matter is covered at a particular grade level no matter what town the student lives in.

More than 200,000 students, who were in the fourth, eighth and tenth grades, took the test last spring as part of the requirements under the 1993 Education Reform Act. This is the third year the test has been administered.

The Class of 2003 will be the first class required to pass the MCAS in English and math as tenth graders in order to graduate. Failing students will have two years to bring their scores up to an acceptable level.

Malvey said results will be mailed to parents after Thanksgiving. MCAS nights at both the middle-high school and Deer Hill School will be announced soon.

At the Dec. 7 school committee meeting, the MCAS results will be discussed in depth with a full-blown comparison of this year's scores compared with past years, Malvey said.

However, Malvey said it is important to keep in mind while it is only natural to compare this year's results to last years, the fact is there is a different student population with its own unique characteristics being tested each year.

In grade 4, most scores are up with 34 percent scoring in the proficient and advanced range in English and language arts as compared with 31 percent last year. Fifty-five percent of fourth-graders scored proficient or advanced in math as compared with 54 percent in 1999, and 81 percent scored proficient or advanced in science and technology, as compared with 70 percent last year.

In grade 8, 88 percent scored proficient or advanced in English and language arts compared with 75 percent last year. Seventy-four percent were proficient or advanced in math

Homelessness is an epidemic which seems to only get worse in Massachusetts every year.

"The situation has definitely gotten worse than it was last year, and it was pretty bad at that time as it was" said Eliot Binder, executive director of the Carolina Hill shelter in Marshfield. "There's such a demand for shelters this year. Some homeless people are even getting put in motels around the state on a temporary basis."

Bates Lane family regroups after fire

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The fire at 4 Bates Lane got so hot that it blew the windows out.

But Kermit survived.

"A firefighter asked me [the following day], 'Do you believe in miracles?'" recalled Alison Trager, whose two-story, wood-shingled house was destroyed in a two-alarm fire last Thursday night. "I said 'I can sure use one right about now', and he told me [my daughter's] frog had survived."

The small frog that survived in its plastic container was some consolation to Trager's daughter, Ariel Siegel, who turned 12 the day after the fire tore through their house.

"The firefighters were fantastic. I have nothing but thanks for them. I appreciate everything they did."

— Alison Trager

As most other families spent this past weekend organizing the Thanksgiving meal, or making final travel arrangements, Alison and her husband, Frederic Siegel, spent the weekend talking with insurance agents, cataloging everything that was lost in the blaze that destroyed the house they built 15 years ago.

Shortly before 6 p.m. Thursday, Cohasset Fire Department received a call from neighbors saying a fire was in progress at the corner house. According to Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, when Cohasset firefighters arrived at the scene, the entire house was engulfed and the fire had already vented itself by blowing out windows. Lincoln said a second alarm was struck immediately.

"It was well involved upon arrival," he said. "Once it vented itself and fresh air got

Winter DPW guidelines listed

The D.P.W. has issued the following winter guidelines:

1. Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15.

2. Do not plow or shovel snow, water or any other debris from private property onto roadways or sidewalks.

3. Uncover storm drains when possible.

4. The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mail boxes within the town layout.

Feral cats

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

Recycle oil filters, antifreeze, batteries

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street..

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

Volunteer at senior center

The Cohasset Senior Center needs volunteers.

- Volunteers for Tuesday and Thursday luncheons.
- Volunteers for van drivers.
- Volunteers for an afternoon at the center.
- Volunteers for database entry.

If you can help with any of these—please call the Cohasset Elder Affairs at 383-9112.

Send us e-mail

ZBA debates history of Cohasset Marina site

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The case of Parker Avenue and Border Street neighbors against the Cohasset Harbor Marina could come down to what the definition of a commercial marina is.

Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick said the marina's chance of receiving a variance for its recently expanded dock, could hinge on whether lawyers for owner Paul Trendowicz can prove that commercial marina activity did exist on the Parker Avenue site in 1969, when zoning regulations went into effect.

The ZBA previously ruled that the Cohasset Harbor Marina is zoned in two different ways, with part of it zoned for light industry use, and another part zoned residential. Under town bylaws, marinas are allowed in light industrial districts, but not in residential districts without a variance.

In the spring of 1999, Trendowicz, with proper federal and state permits in hand, began expansion of the marina from 35 slips to more than 80. However, neighboring residents on Border Street and Parker Avenue claimed the expanded dock crossed into a residentially zoned district and was in violation of zoning laws. Originally Trendowicz argued that the residential zone did not extend into Bailey's Creek, and that maps showing it did were incorrect. The ZBA eventually ruled against Trendowicz, who then appealed the decision to land court. That case is still pending.

Trendowicz, however switched strategies and returned before the ZBA in October to argue that the marina is a grandfathered non-conforming use, and is therefore entitled to zoning relief. He presented the board with letters from Harbormaster John Winters and Parker Avenue resident Robert Pattison testifying they had rented either boats or slips at the site in 1959-1960, when it was owned by William Silvia. The ZBA was also presented with an aerial photo of the site taken in 1966, showing a dock and boats.

However former town counsel Richard Henderson, representing Border Street residents Michael and Victoria Hurley, argued that the letters and photo hadn't proved there was a commercial marina at the site in 1969.

Monday night, Chittick said he agreed with Henderson and though didn't deny marine activity at the site, he doubted whether it would constitute a 'marina.'

"Winters talked about 1959 and 1960. What I ask is, I can see [in the aerial photo] a dock with a float attached, how do we know whether they were [former owner] Ed Figueiredo's boats or rentals?" Chittick asked.

Michael Bliss, the attorney for Trendowicz, presented the board with an affidavit from Figueiredo's son Richard that said he remembers a marina being in existence at the site in 1969. Bliss said if a marina existed in 1969, then the one currently at the site is just a continuation of the non-conforming use. "Very few went out of business," he said of marinas. "Once you were there you stayed there."

At Chittick's request, Winters testified further at the hearing that slips and boats had been rented at the site in the late 1960s. "It was an active marina from the 1950s to 1969," he said. "There was a continuation between [owners] Silvia and Figueiredo."

Though both Chittick and ZBA member Ben Lacey gave weight to Rich Figueiredo and Winters' testimony, the board questioned motions filed in 1976, 1977, 1982 and 1984 by Ed Figueiredo that asked for permit to "construct and operate" a marina at the site.

Robert Alvarez, the engineer working on the project for Trendowicz, replied that "construct and operate is standard language" found in permit applications for all permitting matters.

Henderson cited a case in Westport where a court ruled a three-boat marina in a residential zoned area could not expand significantly under the non-conforming use designation. "It's factually the same [case] as ours," he said.

ZBA member Jane Goedecke said "the crucial issue is not the size [of the pre-existing marina] but the use [of the site]."

However 35-year Border Street resident William Weeks contended that it wasn't a commercial marina, but merely a place for friends of Silvia or Figueiredo to tie up their boats. "In the late '50s into the '60s, at the very most it was a private dock. It was nothing substantial," he said. "It never struck [me] as comparable to what we think of as a commercial marina."

Even if Trendowicz did establish the marina as a pre-existing non-conforming use, he would have to prove that expansion would prove not substantially detrimental to the neighborhood.

On that point, the hearing was filled with neighbors contending just the opposite.

"It's often a raceway," said David Coletta. "I know because I often wonder how a car can get that much speed from turning off of Border Street.

Victoria Hurley testified that boats motoring in Bailey's Creek were causing erosion to the abutting salt marsh.

Ed Maher of Border Street said he often sees cut-up bleach bottles often used for bailing out boats, and cardboard beer and soda containers in the water.

Michael Hurley said once the floats and piers are removed and stacked up for the winter, they smell and cause an eyesore.

The ZBA voted to close the hearing of the matter, but will allow written testimony for the next two weeks from anyone who wants to give their view on what was at the site in 1969.

in, it burned very freely."

Lincoln said all three of Cohasset's fire vehicles were at the scene plus a ladder and engine from Scituate. All available firefighters reported to the scene. He said the firefighters attacked the fire "aggressively" and had it under control within half an hour.

"The fire had burned for at least an hour before it was discovered," Lincoln said.

No one was in the house at the time. Trager said she was out and received a call on her cell phone around 6:40 p.m. telling her what was going on.

Trager arrived at the scene shortly after 7 p.m., as firefighters were breaking the remaining windows in the house, checking for flare-ups. Despite the chilly, windy night, a crowd gathered near the house that is just down the street from the Beechwood Church.

Flames still licked the shingles on the right corner and on the roof an hour after firefighters arrived. Huge sections of the structure's exterior were scorched by flames that had come through the windows. The entire rear of the house was left charred. Even the house's small satellite dish was burned. Lincoln said firefighters remained at the scene until nearly midnight.

One firefighter strained a back muscle during the fire, but remained on duty. There were no other serious injuries.

Lincoln described the house as "pretty well gutted inside" and said it had been declared "structurally unsound" by Cohasset Building Inspector Bob Egan.

The day after the fire, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, right, was back on the scene with one of his firefighters.

Trager said she has been working with her insurance company to catalog everything that was lost so the family could start rebuilding. Only a smattering of clothes and personal items were spared. However, Trager said at one point during the fire she asked firefighters to find a Rubbermaid container filled with pictures of her parents. Sure enough, Trager said, they found it and brought it out.

"If you want an endorsement for Rubbermaid, you got it," she joked.

"The firefighters were fantastic. I have nothing but thanks to them. I appreciate everything they did."

She said her family is currently staying with neighbors, Ronnie and David McMorris of Doane Street. A fund has been set up at Pilgrim Cooperative Bank in Cohasset to help with the rebuilding. Anyone interested in making a donation to the fund can make checks out to the "Trager-Siegel Fire Fund."

Ronnie McMorris, a town selectman, said the outpouring of help has been outstanding. "People have been wonderful. You name they've brought it," she said. "People they don't even know have stopped by."

She said even Ariel's friends have pitched in, putting together an outfit for an affair at her temple over the weekend, and are working to replace her lost Beanie Baby collection. Teachers and students at the middle school organized a special birthday card for her Friday morning.

McMorris said to have the fire at this time of year was particularly tough, because her family had shared Thanksgiving with the Siegels in the house shortly after it had been built.

No cause of the fire had been determined as of press time, but fire investigators believe it started in the kitchen area.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

BEING THANKFUL

Happy Thanksgiving, Cohasset. I hope that everyone has a wonderful holiday and is able to take some time to reflect on your family, friends and neighbors and to also reflect and remember the real things that we all have to be thankful for. As we all know, a family here in town suffered a loss in their home last week.

The Siegel family of Bates Lane lost their home in a devastating fire but thankfully, no one was hurt. As a town, we should pull together and offer help in any way that we can. the first priority for this family is to find suitable housing while the home is rebuilt. If any of you know of a situation that may work for this family, please let us know, here at the Mariner or at one of my contact numbers.

There is a fund set up at The Pilgrim Cooperative Bank named the "Trager, Seigel Fire Fund" for all donations. I will have a list next week of some much needed items that can be donated to the family as they get back on their feet.

HONORING CLARK

After enjoying a delicious breakfast, why not head to the Thanksgiving Football game being held at Alumni Field. The Clark Chatterton Honor Committee, extends an invitation to one and all to attend this game. At half time, Clark will be honored. In addition, the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund has been established. This fund will be available to all Cohasset Middle/High School athletic teams and activities to purchase those items which are not supported through the regular process.

The fund-raiser will be three-fold. 1. A kickoff one-time drive. 2. an annual 6K walk/run on the morning of Homecoming and 3. and annual Music Circus show with a block of tickets available to the public with an amount added to the Memorial Fund.

Contributions to the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund can be made c/o Jack DeLorenzo, Cohasset Middle/High School, 143 Pond Street, Cohasset MA, 02025.

COLLEGE FIELD HOCKEY

Neely Wakeman, of Cohasset was a member of this years NCAA Div. III Field Hockey championship team from Hobart William Smith College this year in Salisbury, Maryland. William Smith finished the year with a 20-1 overall record claiming its third national championship. Neely, who is the daughter of Sam and Linda Wakeman and the granddaughter of Frances Wakeman, is a graduate of Holderness School in Plymouth, New Hampshire.

T-DAY BREAKFAST

On Thursday, the local chapter of the Sons of American Legion will host an all-you-can-eat Thanksgiving Day breakfast from 7:30-9 am. at the Legion Hall on Summer Street. The cost is $4 and the event is open to the public. For information, feel free to call 781-383-9657.

HOLIDAY WREATHS

METCO holiday wreaths and candles are being sold to benefit the METCO Scholarship Fund. Wreaths are 22-inches in diameter and are sure to add some holiday cheer to your home. Also, new this year, METCO coordinators are selling ivory-colored pillar candles for $10 each. These beautiful candles measure 3x6 inches. All orders must be received by Dec 1 and checks should be made out to the Cohasset PSO-METCO and returned to the main office at any of the schools. Pick up is on Saturday, Dec 2 from 9 a.m.-2 p.m. at the Middle High School.

BU GRADUATE

Boston University awarded academic degrees to 1,121 students this fall, including Cohasset resident, Melissa P. Brennan. Melissa, who graduated cum laude, received a bachelor of arts in psychology. Great job, Melissa!

RUSTY SKIPPERS

The South Shore Community Center, The Rusty Skippers Band and First Parish Church would like to invite everyone to a community tree lighting and carol sing-a-long at 3 p.m., on Sunday, Nov. 26 on the Town Common. The Rusty Skippers will play a selection of Christmas music around the town Christmas tree. At dusk, the tree will be lit for the season. Immediately following the tree-lighting, all are invited for cocoa and goodies at the Parish House of First Parish,(23 North Main St.) In the event of truly inclement weather, the Skippers will play inside the Parish House. Donations of a non-perishable food item for the Cohasset Food Pantry would be appreciated. The Rusty Skippers will also be playing at noon on Saturday, Dec 2 at the Village Fair inside the Meeting House on the Common.

CHRISTMAS TREES

Christmas Trees Anyone? First Parish in Cohasset is again offering fresh cut balsam Christmas trees to be picked up on the day of the village fair in Cohasset on Dec 2 or the following day. Trees are $35 for any size, 5-9 feet tall, in thin, fat or full shapes. In addition to being a fund-raiser for the church, trees are donated to groups and people served by community organizations. Preorder by Nov 22 to be entered in a free drawing for a free tree. Please call 383-9845 with any questions.

Well, that is all for this week. Please remember to send in all news, B-Days or other interesting items to jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or 923-1057. Have a wonderful Thanksgiving and I will talk to you next week. — Jennifer Piepenbrink

Cohasset's Sunrise Assisted Living Director Mary Pennie, resident Merrit Clegg, and Cohasset Rotary Club President Bob Groebel, work to blow out the candles on Clegg's 101st birthday cake in Monday night's Sunrise/Rotary sponsored birthday celebration.

Merrit Clegg, proud resident of Sunrise Assisted Living in Cohasset, poses with Director Mary Pennie at Clegg's 101st Birthday party at the assisted living center. Clegg will officially be 101 on Nov. 22. Born in 1899, he will have lived within three centuries as of January 1, 2001.

Candy making is a holiday tradition at Beechwood church

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The time it takes for the sea to transform shards of glass into tiny treasures — known as beach glass — that come in all shapes and colors may be nature's secret.

But one doesn't have to go very far inland to find a different but equally delightful form of beach glass in-the-making with the creative process also a well-guarded secret.

For at least 20 years, a group of women — all volunteers at the Beechwood Congregational Church — gather in the church kitchen to make beach glass candy in every color and flavor imaginable from a delicious, secret concoction of syrups and sugar.

It's all part of the church's preparation for the annual Village Fair, slated for Dec. 2. The Village Fair is a Cohasset multi-church event that celebrates the holiday season and raises money for myriad causes.

And while real beach glass is a slow process, making beach glass candy requires teamwork and speed.

"I couldn't do it without the lovely ladies here, it's a team effort," says Gerry Ainslie, who coordinates the candy-making effort.

For the second week in a row last Wednesday, an assembly line of about a dozen Cohasset women surrounded the church's kitchen table with scissors in hand. Ainslie and several helpers cooked the syrup, poured it onto a flat pan and then cut it into strips as soon as it set up. Then they tossed the rapidly cooling candy to the "cutters," who rolled the strips in powdered sugar and quickly cut them into tiny bits, a little bigger than Tic-Tacs.

Speed was critical because the candy strips can harden quickly making them too tough to cut.

The women made batch after batch of the candy that included flavors such as watermelon, spearmint, butter rum, lemon-lime, orange, anise, amaretto and more. Once the candy bits are cut and covered with sugar they are swept into a huge bowl along with other flavors and colors. Then on another night, the women gather to put the candy into sterilized baby-food jars that are donated. They sell the small jars of candy with decorated lids at the fair for $3.75 a piece. Twenty-five percent of the proceeds go to the church mission fund and will be given to charity; the rest goes to the general fund at the church.

The yearly candy-making ritual is an event the women enjoy. Ainslie likened it to a sewing circle.

So dedicated is the crew that one 94-year-old member — who is now living at Norwell Knoll, a nursing home — sent a reminder along that the women be sure to create a "pillow effect" as they roll and cut the strips so the edges wouldn't get too sharp.

The candy-making process covers the women in confectioner's sugar, but they don't seem to mind.

"I love coming, I love the girls," said Jean Bailey, 77.

About seven or eight batches into the evening, Ainslie asked her helpers if they'd had enough, but they were on a roll.

"Then let's go for it!" Ainslie said.

Also on sale at Beechwood Congregational Church from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. during the Village Fair will be crafts, handiwork, wreaths, clam chowder, coffee, cold drinks and hot dogs. There will also be a table of baked goods.

Of Plymouth Plantation

With all the confusion surrounding the presidential election, it seems fitting this Thanksgiving to remember how the American experiment in freedom and democracy all began. America traces its origins to the first small band of European immigrants fleeing persecution and seeking opportunities. In the years to follow, new waves of immigrants would come to these shores, all in search of freedom and a better life.

It is an ongoing saga that should remind 21st century Americans of the need for tolerance among all people of differing heritages and views, and the importance of coming together in adversity with a spirit of concern for the greater good.

Centuries later, this nation is still a "Citty upon a Hill. The eyes of all people are uppon us," as John Winthrop, the first governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, wrote in 1630.

William Bradford served for 35 years as the governor of Plymouth and he has gone down in history as the patriarch of the First Thanksgiving. Bradford, who died in 1650, chronicled the early life of Plymouth in his little known manuscript, "Of Plymouth Plantation." The manuscript was not published in his lifetime, but was used later by colonial historians as a reference.

The following are excerpts from "Of Plymouth Plantation." Bradford tells of setting sail for the New World on the Mayflower and, later, how the European newcomers felt upon arriving in a barren and threatening wilderness. The passengers on the Mayflower were bound for the Hudson River but encountered treacherous weather, uncharted seas and shoals and instead settled on Plymouth.

"When they came to the place they found the ship and all things ready; and such of their friends as could not come with them followed after them and sundrie also came from Amsterdam to see them shipped and to take their leave of them. That night was spent with litle sleep by the most, but with freindly entertainmente and christian discourse and other reall expressions of true christian love. The next day the wind being faire, they went aboard, and their friends with them, where truly dolefull was the sight of that sad and mournfull parting; to see what sights and sobs and prayers did sound amongst them, what tears did gush from every eye and pithy speeches pierced each heart . . . their Reverend pastor falling downe on his knees, (and they all with him,) with waterie cheeks commended them with most fervent prayers to the Lord and his blessing. And then with mutuall embraces and many tears, they took their leaves one of an other; which proved to be the last leave to many of them."

Bradford wrote of the Trans-Atlantic crossing. "Now all being compact together in one shipe, they put to sea againe with a prosperous wind, which continued diverse days together, which was some incouragemente unto them. Yet according to the usuall manner, many were afflicted with seasickness . . . After long beating at sea they fell with that land which is called Cape Cod, the which being made and certainly known to be it, they were not a little joyfull . . . and thought themselves hapy to get out of those dangers before night overtook them, as by Gods providence they did. And the next day they got into the Cape-harbor where they rode in safetie . . .

"Being thus arrived in a good harbor and brought safe to land, they fell upon their knees and blessed the God of heaven, who had brought them over the vast and furious ocean, and delivered them from all the perils and miseries thereof, again to set their feet on the firm and stable earth, their proper element . . .

"Here I cannot but stay and make a pause, and stand half amazed at this poor people's present condition. And so I think will the reader too, when he well considers the same. Being thus passed the vast ocean, and a sea of troubles before in their preparation (as may be remembered that which went before), they had now no friends to welcome them, nor inns to entertain or refresh their weatherbeaten bodys, no houses or much less townes to repaire too, to seeke for succour. What could now sustain them but the spirit of God and his grace?"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Revitalization

To the Editor:

A letter from the Dormitzers makes many sensible points., but is marred be recycling the insinuation that the revitalization effort is focused on converting Cohasset into another cutsey Nantucket. That's the mantra that's buzzing around, repeated ad nauseam.. It's not supported by the evidence and is only a cloak for willingness to let the village continue to die, with conscience salved by a minor low-cost cosmetics.

"Preserving the natural and historic legacy" sounds noble, but is meaningless babble if you kill off the one organization that has the potential to preserve and enhance that legacy..

Suggesting that the selectmen "reclaim their leadership role in setting policy for change" is at odds with the fact that the selectmen traditionally have functioned in a reactive rather than a proactive way. And that's probably best. Let citizen groups, whether appointed or self appointed, continue to conceive and execute their good works, and let our official representatives continue to be the gatekeepers. That doesn't preclude them from being supportive, where appropriate.

Runway proposal

TO THE EDITOR:

A coastline is special. Not every state has a coastline. Not even every part of Massachusetts has a coastline. A coastline is a treasured destination of people who live far from the sea. Just look at the property values of coastline vicinities. Massport couldn't care less about your coastline — your appreciation of it or the value of your coastline property as a financial investment.

Massport proposes building a runway that would put at least 98,000 low altitude jet arrivals over the most beautiful and accessible coastline of the South Shore. That averages-out to about 315 days per year of 18 plus hours (6 a.m. to past 12 midnight) per day! The Worlds End Reservation, the south Harbor Islands, the town harbors and beaches of Hull, Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Weymouth would be bathed in jet noise and exhaust emissions all year. And of course, this would include your home as well.

The cleanup of Boston Harbor is a great and significant step that recognizes the symbolic and the practical reach of the coastal waters into all our lives. The cleanup also reflects a desire that Boston be recognized as a great city with unique character and pride. Constant engine roar and pollution have the effect of turning every place into the same place — where noise and bad air are the dominant experience. The south coast of Massachusetts is very special for too many people to be treated so cheaply.

You must understand that the proposed runway is extremely controversial.

Massport says it is necessary for the decrease of delays. Most delays are caused by conditions that building that runway will do nothing about. For instance, Logan experiences the second worst-most-unpredictable weather (San Francisco is first) in the lower 48 states. Massport's own figures show that any delay reduction they project from building the runway would be temporary, not permanent. Independent assessments show that no delay reduction would result. Trading the coastal splendor of the South Shore for nothing is a bad bargain for South Shore residents and for Greater Boston.

LIBRARY CORNER

Gift to the Library

Ms. Shirley Marten, Paul Pratt Memorial Library volunteer, presented the library with a gift of an autographed book, "Land of the Commonwealth," by Belmont, photographer Richard Cheek

This stunning photographic book is exclusively devoted to the conserved landscapes of Massachusetts and the first of its kind to pay tribute to our natural landscapes. Through the Trustees of Reservations, town and city governments, state and federal agencies, non-profit organizations, private institutions and generous landowners over one-fifth of our state is protected from development. "Land of the Commonwealth" celebrates the conservation achievements of Massachusetts and its continuing commitment to this endeavor.

Cheek, a freelance photographer, has spent his career recording visual history of American architecture and landscape design. He is the author of 14 books and widely published in New England. Photos by Cheek appear regularly in magazine or newspaper articles on house and gardens.

Linda Wakeman, president of the Friends of the Library, accepted the gift from Marten, on behalf of the library, at the monthly Friends meeting. Thank you to Shirley and please look for this beautiful and educational book at the library.

Children's room

Every November Osgood School students celebrate Massachusetts Family Literacy Month by participating in school sponsored literacy-related activities. In conjunction with this program, Osgood also complements this program with a character education curriculum developed by the school. This year the school-wide focus is the "International Year of Peace" promoting peaceful kind behavior at school.

Included in a Character Education newsletter from the school to all parents will be a list of books that explore kindness to share as a family. Suzanne Terry, Paul Pratt Memorial Children's Librarian, has offered to set up an additional display of kindness-related books for all who wish to participate in the program.

Santa Claus

You better watch out because Santa Claus is coming to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sunday, Dec. 17, at 3 p.m. for all children or adults who would like to visit with him.

Santa accompanied by his "Elf who wouldn't wear tights," will entertain the children with holiday stories and lore. There will be a departing treat for all good boys and girls. Join us for this holiday visit.

Hedlund victory party is Dec. 3

The Friends of Hedlund will hold "Victory 2000: A Salute to State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund" on Sunday, Dec. 3, from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham.

Suggested donations for the event are $35 per person and include a celebratory brunch. Tickets may be obtained by calling Polly Logan at (781) 383-0031.

As state senator from the Plymouth-Norfolk District, Hedlund represents a diverse constituency in parts of Braintree as well as Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate and Weymouth.

In addition to Logan, Victory 2000 Cohasset co-chairs include Janet Fogarty, Ted and Julie Guild, Hon. William Weeks and Rob Spofford. Joining the Friends of Senator Hedlund will be special invited state, county and local officials, including GOP Senate Leader Brian Lees, GOP House Leader Fran Marini, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, Sheriff Charles Decas and County Commissioner Robert Stone.

U.S. Presidency: Does leadership really matter?

Remarks delivered by Wigmore A. Pierson at a meeting of the Cohasset Historical Society at the Lightkeeper's House

.I wish to thank the members of the Cohasset Historical Society and particularly the vice chair, Martha Gjesteby, for inviting me to share some thoughts with you about one of my lifelong passions: the presidency of the United States and the lives of the men who have served in the office for over 211 years, starting in April 1789, with the swearing in of George Washington as our first president.

So began the great experiment: a national government "Of the people, by the people and for the people."

My personal interest in the presidency began with my fleeting glimpse of President Harry Truman on the rear platform of his Whistle Stop Campaign Train in the fall of 1948 in Newton, Mass. Since then I have seen with my own eyes or shaken hands with every succeeding president except President George Bush. Also, I saw former President Herbert Hoover at the Republican convention in Chicago in 1960 and have spoken with Charles Taft (son of President William Howard Taft) in 1970.

Shortly before leaving office as the nation's second president, John Adams wrote to his wife, Abigail: "I pray heaven to bestow the best of blessings on this house and all that shall hereafter inhabit it. May none but honest and wise men ever rule under this roof." These words were penned by Adams on Nov. 2, 1800, the first president to occupy the house, then called the President's Mansion. Incidentally, President Franklin Roosevelt caused these words to be inscribed on the mantel in the state dining room at the White House.

While President Adams did not specifically mention the quality of leadership, that is what I would like to explore.

To do so, I first feel compelled to define leadership and to reflect on the "great man" theory of history given its fullest expression by the Scottish social critic and historian Thomas Carlyle in his essay "On Heroes, Hero-Worship and the Heroic in History" published in 1841.

Carlyle wrote, "The history of the world is but the biography of great men." In other words, the course of history has been shaped and lead by exceptional individuals. I subscribe to this theory. Of the 41 men who have served as president (parenthetically, Democrat Grover Cleveland served two non-consecutive terms and therefore is our 22nd and 24th president), a few must be deemed failures: Warren Harding, Ulysses Grant, Franklin Pierce, Martin Van Buren, Richard Nixon, Herbert Hoover and James Buchanan.

Many more presidents have had average or below average presidencies for many different reasons.

In short, those presidencies marked by successful and strong leadership have been few and far between but were vital to resolve national emergencies and, ultimately, to move the USA to first place among the nearly 200 nations on the planet Earth at the beginning of the 21st century.

I believe outstanding leadership and successful presidencies must include many, if not all, of the following (not in a particular order):

1. A clearly articulated purpose and vision of where the president wants to take the nation.

2. Superior learning and intelligence. In remarks prepared for delivery at the Trade Mart in Dallas, Texas, Nov. 22, 1963, John Kennedy would have said "leadership and learning are indispensable to each other."

3. The ability to inspire confidence and trust from his fellow countrymen, i.e., charisma, persuasiveness.

4. The setting of goals for the nation.

5. A fast start in office: Jan. 20 to the August recess, in his first year in office.

6. An ability to take risks in leadership and decision-making.

7. Character: inner strength of the soul.

8. Strong advisers.

9. An ability to respect and successfully work with all elements in the political system: Congress, public, press, foreign powers, domestic interest groups and domestic elites.

10. Definitive results in resolving and moving forward the nation's and the international community's unfinished business.

11. Personality traits of integrity, honesty and morality.

12. A living legacy carried on after the president leaves office. In other words, to use a popular word of today: the establishment of a "new paradigm." Quoting Walter Lippman after Franklin Roosevelt died "The final test of a leader is that he leaves behind him in other men the conviction and the will to carry on ..."

Using these criteria, I believe the nine most outstanding presidents are: Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Polk, Lincoln, Teddy Roosevelt, Wilson, Franklin Roosevelt and Truman.

We begin with George Washington (1789-1797), our nation's only authentic classical hero. Sensitive to his setting of hundreds of precedents, large and small, as the first president wrote, "My political conduct and nominations must be exceedingly circumspect."

One congressional tribute appeared after he died in December 1799, "First in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen."

Thomas Jefferson (1801-1809) was a man of immense intellect. President Kennedy said of Jefferson at a White House dinner and reception honoring Nobel Prize winners in April 1962, "I think this is the most extraordinary collection of talent, of human knowledge, that has ever been gathered together at the White House, with the possible exception of when Thomas Jefferson dined alone."

Although clearly a genius as the principle author of our national creed in our Declaration of Independence, he was a man of serious contradictions: learned - naïve; friendly - aloof; believer in people - aristocrat; human equality - slave owner.

All this said, he stands as one of our greatest presidents.

Andrew Jackson (1829-1837) was the first president to truly represent the so-called "common man" or "working class" Americans and so lead the country to become a true democracy.

Jackson was feisty throughout his presidency and worked hard to expand the power of the office especially using the power of the veto. He vetoed the Second National Bank Act in July of 1832 and then issued his Nullification Proclamation in December 1832, thereby standing up for the integrity of the Union.

James Polk (1845-1849) has earned a place in history as a significant leader by settling the Oregon Border Question with Britain, by annexing Texas, by acquiring California, by lowering tariffs and by establishing an independent treasury. Polk worked tirelessly throughout his four years as president to hold together coalitions to establish a coast-to-coast nation. American expansion and manifest destiny through the acquisition of California and New Mexico were in Polk's own view the greatest importance to the nation since the adoption of the Constitution.

Abraham Lincoln: (1861-1865) "My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union and is not either to save or to destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it; and if I could save it by freeing all the slaves I would do it; and if I could do it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that." Letter to Horace Greeberg, Aug. 22, 1862.

At the end of four terrible years Lincoln emancipated the slaves and saved the Union. Lincoln was a man of uncommon wisdom and insight, who exhibited all of the characteristics of a truly heroic statesman and leader.

Wig Pierson speaks to the crowd at the dedication of the Lightkeepers Memorial on Government Island last spring.

Few men enjoyed being president more than Theodore Roosevelt (1901-1909). He popularized an old adage, "Speak softly and carry a big stick; you will go far." He counseled that the joy of living is being in the arena fighting for what you believe in. He said better to fight and lose "than to take rank with those poor spirits who neither enjoy much nor suffer much because they live in the gray twilight that knows not victory nor defeat."

Here was a great leader: preserving our natural resources, trust busting and obtaining the Panama Canal.

Woodrow Wilson (1913-1921) was a consummate idealist and scholar having been president of Princeton University and governor of New Jersey. Among his many accomplishments are the establishment of The Federal Reserve Board, the selection of a superior cabinet, "New Freedom" programs regulating industry and initiating social welfare policies in anticipation of FDR's "New Deal" and finally and reluctantly, entering and winning World War I in Europe for the allies.

His greatest vision, a "League of Nations" with its 14 points, died with a treaty defeat in the United States Senate and Wilson's great dream for a New World Order was shattered.

After suffering a nearly fatal stroke toward the end of his presidency, Wilson's cabinet carried on the business of the government.

Ultimately, Wilson's success as president put the United States of America on the world stage as a leader for the first time.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt (1933-1945) was unquestionably the greatest and most successful leader in the 20th century.

From his inaugural address in 1933: "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself." Through his "first 100 days" when 15 major bills were passed by a grateful Congress as part of the "New Deal" for America, to his successfully leading the allies to ultimate victory in World War II, Franklin Roosevelt stands head and shoulders above every other president of the 20th century. He established the new paradigm of an interventionist government ending the laissez-faire approach to government which had existed for decades. After he died of a stroke in Warm Springs, Ga., in April 1945, the New York Times editorialized, "Men will thank God on their knees a 100 years from now that Franklin D. Roosevelt was in the White House."

Harry S. Truman (1945-1953) earns his place among our top-10 presidents by his decisive leadership after World War II in pressing forward with organizing the United Nations; in ending the war with Germany and Japan; in establishing the Marshall Plan to save Europe; the heroic Berlin airlift; facing down the Soviet Union and Communism in the early years of the Cold War; creating a variety of defense pacts around the world, including NATO and ultimately blocking the North Korean Communists from capturing South Korea.

Truman's optimism, decisiveness, and the common-man touch made him stand out as one of our nation's most successful leaders.

Does leadership really matter? You bet it does! Witness the White House failures:

Martin Van Buren, Zachary Taylor, Millard Fillmore, Millard Fillmore, Franklin Pierce, James Buchanan,, Andrew Johnson, Andrew Johnson, Ulysses Grant, Benjamin Harrison, Benjamin Harrison, Warren Harding, Herbert Hoover, Richard Nixon, and finally, no discussion would be complete without a brief look at recent presidencies: Eisenhower to Clinton.

Eisenhower, Kennedy, and Johnson barely top 50 percent; Nixon, failure; Ford, Carter, Reagan, and Bush, bottom half of presidents; Clinton, couldn't master his character flaws.

I agree with David Gergen, who has written: "Today voters are eager to find a leader who will set forth a clear, steady path into the future. That next president who does so will be the next to leave a living legacy and have a successful presidency."

Middle-high school to do its homework

our students academically, morally, emotionally and physically," the mission statement reads. It is the fruit of a two-year process to create, in the words of Principal Michael Jones, a "living document to guide the school over the years." The document also outlines a set of learning expectations for the school's students, such as "Cohasset students will communicate effectively," and "the Cohasset student will be a critical and creative thinker and problem solver...understand the responsibilities of citizenship and community membership...understand the importance of being healthy and being physically active."

Gill said the accreditation process checks to ensure the school is teaching students according to these beliefs. As a result, the school will be embarking in a thorough review and rewriting of its curricula.

"We actually evaluate where we are at, how well we do what we think we do, what we say is important," Gill explained. "We need to make sure the curriculum is aligned with the mission statement and learning expectations. We also need to make sure the curriculum is aligned with all the new state frameworks that are out."

Gill said during the official site visit, the examiners will review the mission statement and learning expectations and compare it with the curriculum. "The curriculum has to reflect those thongs," he continued. "They could look at our English curriculum and say 'There's nothing in here that speaks about what you address in the mission statement or the expectations of students to learn those things you said you felt were important.'"

As a result of the future in-depth analysis of the school's curriculum, the school is looking to schedule 13 early release days starting in January, 2001 through June 2002, an average of one a month, for the purpose of "professional development workshops." Though students will be released at 11:20 a.m., teachers will remain at school, working on various self-study committees, as well as rewriting the curriculum for every course offered at the Middle/High School. The school committee, much to the delight of the board's student representatives, approved three early release days for the current school year, and will formally schedule the other 10 at a later time.

Gill said the early-release days were needed because of a lack of time during a normal school day for teachers to meet. "There's not a lot of time for our teachers in our day or work year to sit down and work on these things," he said. "We need groups of teachers to sit and work together on curriculum issues and they just don't have the time during the day."

The project's steering committee, which Gill and Schlieff head up, will oversee sub-committees formed to look at the seven criteria the school will be evaluated on: school and community profile, curriculum, instruction, leadership and organization, assessment, school resources for learning and community resources for learning. Gill said each committee will be responsible for analyzing its topic and submitting a formal narrative for the accreditation committee's use.

"It allows us to beat them [the accreditation committee] to the punch," Gill explained. 'It gives us an opportunity to see where we are, and make sure we're doing what we say we are doing."

According to a timeline put together by the steering committee, the school expects to have the (52 percent in 1999); 54 percent were proficient or advanced in science & technology (44 percent in 1999). In history and social science, 16 percent were proficient as compared with 20 percent last year.

In grade 10, scores showed 79 percent as proficient or advanced in English (82 percent in 1999); 72 percent proficient or advanced in math (59 percent last year); and 53 percent proficient or advanced in science & technology (51 percent in 1999).

Malvey urged parents not to become alarmed if they see a slight decrease in certain scores because different students were tested. He said the school department's task is to continue to look at the curriculum while helping individual students improve.

Overall, he said there were no surprises.

"The scores are right on target in terms of what we expect the students to do," Malvey said. "The tests do point out areas where we can do better from the curriculum and instruction standpoint."

He explained the history and social science scores for eighth-graders were low because the state curriculum frameworks have changed and the scores reflected the fact that Cohasset had not aligned its curriculum.

The MCAS recently came under fire by the Massachusetts Association of School Committees that voted to eliminate linking the "high-stakes" test to graduation. The association will lobby the legislature to change the requirement.

Malvey said while he supports using the MCAS to improve curriculum he is against the graduation requirement.

"I don't think there should be one test to determine a youngster's future out of high school," he said. Malvey said he is an advocate of multiple ways to assess students.

MCAS tests are based on learning standards established for all public schools in the state. The purpose of the testing is to increase student achievement levels and improve instructional practices across all grades. All fourth-, eighth- and tenth-graders are required to take the test under the Education Reform Act.

MCAS exams include short answer and essay questions as well as multiple choice.

Failing – Students at this level demonstrate a minimal understanding of subject matter and do not solve simple problems.

Needs improvement – Students at this level demonstrate a partial understanding of subject matter and solve simple problems.

Proficient –Students at this level demonstrate a solid understanding of challenging subject matter and solve a wide variety of problems.

Advanced – Students at this level demonstrate a comprehensive and in-dept understanding of rigorous subject matter and provide sophisticated solutions to complex problems.

Plight of homeless continues to escalate

But this year is just another chapter in the continuing saga of rising rates of homelessness in the Commonwealth.

"The number of homeless families in Massachusetts increased 100 percent between 1990 and 1998 and has not been abated in light of the booming economy," states a passage on the Massachusetts Coalition for the Homeless website. "In fact, the economy itself contributes to skyrocketing rents and a continued increase in the number of homeless families.

"The result is over 10,000 homeless families with the number continuing to grow."

And the problem is not just restricted to the cities of Massachusetts — it's everywhere. Even on the South Shore.

"Our place is filled to capacity," Binder said of Carolina Hill. "It seems like it's always that way. I think it's because people are staying longer, and because of the overall lack of facilities elsewhere."

Binder said he has 16 rooms available in his shelter, and he usually is able to house about 40 people at any given time. But Binder is concerned because he sees the number of homeless people going up each year, and he feels that something needs to be done immediately.

"It's going to be up to the government to ensure that there's more affordable rental units out there," Binder said. "One of the reasons I think shelters are so full is because people just can't afford the rents out there. There's no affordable housing, and it's just turning into a nightmare."

Binder said with the rates of homelessness growing rapidly, so does the emotion which goes with his job.

"It's always a tough thing to see people go through," Binder said. "And watching children go through it is even tougher."

Dorothy Newell, the executive director for the South Shore Friends of the Homeless based in Weymouth, also believes the situation has gotten worse since last year.

"All the shelters around here are so full," she said. She reiterated Binder's statement, noting "some people are even being put into hotels for emergency purposes." Newell said Friends of the Homeless shelter has the capacity to house approximately 10 families.

Newell said one of the main problems this year relative to the homelessness epidemic is that the state has put tighter restrictions on income requirements for working homeless people who need to apply and qualify for shelter.

"Many people don't qualify for the state programs because their incomes (from their jobs) are just over the limit," Newell said. "But at the same time, they can't afford to pay rent around the area because they don't get paid enough. Basically, these people can't qualify for shelter and they can't afford to keep a place of their own. There's just no safety net. The real question is what's happening to these people?"

"All ships don't rise with the same tide. Some of them sink."

Newell said more and more homeless people on the South Shore who cannot qualify for state assistance and who cannot afford their own places are being forced to seek shelter as far away as Springfield.

"The once-affordable places in southeastern Massachusetts are not affordable anymore, especially on the South Shore," Newell said. "Last year, people who couldn't find shelter around here could at least find shelter in places like Fall River—now they have to go much farther than that."

"Most of the people that we see in our shelter are the working poor," said John Yazwinski, executive director of Father Bill's Place, a shelter in Quincy. "Those are people who are working, but can't afford the rents around the area. Almost 50 percent of the people who are living here are working full time. But we also see a lot of families, and also a lot of single people."

Yazwinski said in 1999, about 1,200 homeless people came through the doors of Father Bill's Place. But that number has risen — so far this year Yazwinski said 1,500 people have come through the doors.

"There's no question that the situation is getting worse," Yazwinski said. "But our policy has always been to save one life at a time. But with all the overflow we're experiencing these days at the shelter, it's getting more and more hectic."

Yazwinski said there are 95 beds at Fr. Bill's Place, but usually, the shelter house more than 100 people by putting individuals on the cafeteria floor and other extra spaces.

Yazwinski said he agrees with the other shelter directors regarding the reasons of increased homelessness rates and shelter-use, but he said there are other reasons as well.

"I believe many people who end up homeless are being inappropriately discharged from state facilities like hospitals, foster homes, and even corrections facilities," he said. "These people are using shelters as safety nets more and more, but they have nowhere to go, so what else are they supposed to do?"

He added, "But the other main thing contributing to homelessness is the fact that not a lot of affordable housing units have been built around the South Shore. Even the elderly are getting forced out, and in fact, we're seeing more and more homeless elderly people each year."

"Any of us is a couple months from being homeless," Newell said. "It's not just poor people. Lose your job, get in an accident—these things can happen to anyone whether it's a lawyer, a doctor, or whoever. It can happen, and it is."

Clark Chatterton. The memory of Cohasset's esteemed longtime Athletic Director will be honored during a halftime ceremony at Thursday's Thanksgiving game. He's already been named the Mariner's "Citizen of the Year". We figured we'd give him the clean sweep.

A gridiron feast

Chatterton's memory to be honored at halftime

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Every year, for the last game of the season, Hull plays Cohasset for the annual Thanksgiving Day football game. Being such intense rivals, the two towns always have an adrenaline ridden game that leaves one side delighted for a year, the other waiting until next November to exact revenge.

"This is really going to be a special day for a very special person in Cohasset's history. We're planning something at halftime that we really hope will prove a fitting tribute to Clark's memory."

Cohasset seniors: (L-R) Craig Davis (Capt.), Jeff Scribner, Justin Langham, Brian Krupczak (Capt.), Chris Golden, Ronan Buick.

"That's why you save these games for Thanksgiving," said third year coach Tony Rolfe, who has never lost to Hull after a tie last year and a 14-0 win in 1998.

Despite all the pre-game buzz, Rolfe is readying his team for this game as if were any other.

"We are doing our normal game preparation," he reported, which includes watching a film of every game Hull has played this year. "We have had two weeks off and we will be ready to go."

Emotions will be running high, not only because of the heated rivalry, but also because of the fact that this is the final game of the season for the Skippers, as well as for the Pirates. For those graduating next June, that means this is their last game as a high schooler.

"It is the last game for the seniors," reported Rolfe. "Thanksgiving is always a big deal."

Rolfe will be counting on his seniors, as well as his many offensive and defensive threats to lead the Skippers (5-4, 1-4 in league play) against the Pirates (6-3, 3-2).

But Rolfe and company will have their hands full with Hull's star ball carrier Ken Sault, who leads the league with 13 rushing touchdowns in nine games.

Sault has run the ball effectively this season, as he has averaged over 130 yards per game. Rolfe feels that cutting down Hull's ground attack is the key to winning the football game.

"If we can't stop [Sault], then the game is over," said Rolfe. "We will need our usual cast of characters to

Sharks win Super Bowl

Scituate/Cohasset mites take bite out of Barnstable, 6-0.

Contributed by Geoff Gaughan

Great football teams usually are built upon solid defense. The Scituate/Cohasset Sharks combined outstanding team defense with a 24-yard touchdown run by Gregory Reynolds to claim a hard-earned 6-0 victory over the Barnstable Silver Bullets last Sunday at Marshfield High School in the Super Bowl of the Division I Mites of the Old Colony Youth Football League. The win by the Sharks (8-1-1) resulted in the only loss of the season for the Silver Bullets (7-1-2) who won the league's regular season title and tied the Sharks 14-14 in their only regular season match-up.

Scituate's game winning drive began at their own 39-yard line with 5:41 left in the third quarter after they took over on downs when the Sharks' Michael Fassnacht made a clutch fourth down tackle of Barnstable's Jonathan Wattley, stopping him three yards short of a critical first down. On Scituate's first play after taking possession, quarterback Dean Kennedy sprinted 12 yards around right end to Barnstable's 49-yard line, following the strong downfield blocking of Reynolds. Short gains by Kyle Crowley and Reynolds sandwiched around a Barnstable offside penalty had the Sharks facing a third-and-3 at Barnstable's 42-yard line. Kyle Crowley, on the same play that won last week's Sharks playoff overtime game, took a handoff on the right side and followed the blocking of Robert Carlezon, Jordan Berry, and Boys look back on solid season...

...and ahead at promising future

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Posting a 14-6 record, the boys varsity soccer team closed out a season they surely can be proud of.

After a slow start to the season that saw them loose five of their first nine games, the Skippers finished off the regular season with seven straight wins to advance into the tournament with the 13th seed.

Then, the Skippers, most of whom were playoff veterans after last year's playoff run, rattled off three straight victories to advance once again to the MIAA Division 4 South Sectional Semi-finals.

Cohasset opened the playoffs against Bishop Stang at home, and catapulted themselves into the next round with a 4-2 win behind a pair of goals from junior Dan Kinchla.

The next game for Cohasset was a thrilling 3-2 double-overtime upset in Westport. Junior All-Star Matt Bilodeau scored the deciding goal, as the Skippers advanced into the quarterfinals.

Cohasset then trounced Nantucket after the three hour journey by land and sea, 7-1, to get to the semi-finals for the second straight year.

In the semi-finals, on "neutral ground" at Plymouth North High Schoo, the Skippers took on league rival Norwell (18-0), the #1 seed I nthe Southeast Section. Cohasset lost 1-0 despite the fact that they were able to control the ball in the attacking end of the field for a good portion of the game.

"We had some chances, and I thought we controlled the game in a lot of way," asserted Cohasset's first year coach Dave Nigro. "But they put one in and we didn't."

This season focused around the outstanding play of the graduating seniors, including All-Star captains Erik Shea and Doug O'Brien.

Shea, a sweeper, and O'Brien, a forward, led the team on opposite ends of the field, but were both enormous contributors to the suc-

Curtain closes on 'Osgood era'

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Renowned Norwell High coach calls it a career after 34 years

Every boy who has played soccer at Norwell High over the last 34 years has one thing in common. They all did it for John Osgood. Sadly, newcomers to the team in 2001 will be the first not to know that pleasure.

Following Monday night's loss in the Southeast Sectional championship game to Medway, Osgood, 56 announced his retirement from coaching. He announced earlier this year that he would be retiring from his post as physical education teacher at N.H.S after 35 years, but had remained until recently on the fence about whether to return to coaching.

He did confide in a few of his players a few weeks back that this would be his final run. One of them was captain and South Shore League MVP Chris Camerota, who seemed more heartbroken for Osgood over the loss than for himself.

"We really, really wanted to win this one and then two more for him," said Camerota somberly, indicating a desire to give Osgood his first-ever state championship. "He really deserved it for everything he's done."

Indeed, a state championship is the only prize that has eluded Osgood in his stellar coaching career. He has more than 330 career wins in varsity soccer play. Since the state started tournament play in 1984 to determine divisional champions, Osgood has coached his way to the South Sectional Championship game four times, twice winning to advance to the Eastern Mass. finals. He also honestly has more South Shore League championships than he can recall, including seven in the last 11 years.

"Obviously, I would've liked to have won (a state championship)," said Osgood moments after he saw that dream die. "I thought we might have had a chance with this group, but we just ran into a buzz saw in Medway.

"Still, I couldn't be any prouder of this team. They left it all on the field, and that's the way I'll remember them: fighting to the end."

Osgood has held several other coaching positions at Norwell High, including a long and prosperous stint as varsity boys basketball coach. He left that job in the mid-'80s so that he could follow his son's college basketball career, but later coached the Curry College varsity basketball team. He is currently coach of the N.H.S. freshmen basketball and JV softball team.

"High school games really provide the best and most exciting action around here for my money. I'm going to keep going to as many games as I can, especially the Norwell games."
John Osgood

"Obviously, It's going to feel strange not to be working with the kids next year," he confided. "That's what I'll miss most. I've got some great memories."

Basketball was Osgood's first love. He was the captain of the Boston University basketball team in 1966, and is that school's third all-time leading rebounder.

He has grown to love and appreciate soccer equally, however, and says he looks forward to now watching high school games "for fun."

"High school games really provide the best and most exciting action around here for my money," said Osgood. "I'm going to keep going to as many games as I can, especially the Norwell games. I consider myself a lifelong fan and student of the game."

Few know Osgood better than AD Bill Gerety, who came in with him in 1966 and will go out with him at the end of this school year.

"Ossie has been an inspiration to so many kids who've passed through this school," said Gerety. "You can see a lot of that on the sidelines, but there's a lot of that that takes place behind the scenes. He's a great educator and a great person too."

Echoed tourney soccer standout Joe Rinchuiso, a senior: "He's just been an incredible coach. He stuck with us and never let us give up. He knew how to get the most out of us."

John beseeched me not to "make too big a deal" about his announcement. So, I'll leave it here as a "medium deal"....for now.

Sharks win Super Bowl

Brian O'Reilly, for a first down at Barnstable's 34-yard line.

Aided by another offside penalty on Barnstable, Kennedy's quick count quarterback keeper gave the Sharks a first down at the 24-yard line. Throughout the game, Kennedy's play calling cadence kept the Silver Bullet defenders off balance. Reynolds' touchdown came on a sweep to the left and was keyed by Sean Crowley's block on the Barnstable defensive end. Reynolds' great speed allowed him to get to the corner and outrun a bevy of defenders into the end zone. Scituate's extra point run attempt was stuffed by the Barnstable defense for a two yard loss.

The touchdown was the only scoring in the game as the Sharks defense was never seriously threatened the rest of the game. The shutout by the Sharks was their second straight in the playoffs, and their sixth out of the last seven games they played this season.

The game started awkwardly for Scituate as they received the opening kickoff and were fortunate that Shane Harris and Carlezon recovered a loose ball squib kick at their own 47-yard line. A 13-yard run around left end on fourth down by Dean Kennedy gave the Sharks a first down at Barnstable's 42-yard line. However, Barnstable's defense, aided by a Scituate illegal block penalty, stopped the Sharks on downs at the Barnstable 32-yard line with 3:44 left in the first quarter.

Behind running backs Wattley and Davione Earnest, Barnstable methodically marched up the field on their first offensive possession. It appeared that Earnest was on his way to the end zone when he swept right end for a 10-yard gain before stepping out of bounds at Scituate's 38-yard line. The Sharks' team defense immediately stopped any Barnstable offensive momentum on the next four plays. Fassnacht's solo tackle on firstfirst down resulted in a 4-yard loss. On second down, Paul McInerney and Carlezon stopped the hard running Earnest for no gain. On third down, Kyle Crowley, Harris and Fassnacht gang tackled a Barnstable run and on fourth down, Crowley followed up with another outstanding tackle forcing the Silver Bullets to give up possession on downs at the Scituate 32-yard line.

Scituate's offense was unable to move the ball on their second possession of the half and they turned the ball over to Barnstable at the Scituate 33-yard line. Once again, the defense saved the game. On second down from the Scituate 31-yard line, Barnstable's Earnest made a great run around right end and appeared headed for the end zone before the Sharks' Kennedy made a brilliant play by stripping the ball from him and recovering the fumble at the Scituate 22-yard line.

On Scituate's ensuing first down with 4:56 left in the half, Kyle Crowley brought the spirited Scituate crowd to its feet with a 56-yard run around right end. Crowley was headed for the end zone, only to be caught from behind by the speedy Earnest at Barnstable's 22-yard line. Scituate was unable to move the ball any deeper into Barnstable territory before turning the ball back to them. The Silver Bullets' final four offensive plays of the half were stopped by a number of Scituate defenders, including Joey Leary, Jordan Berry, Reynolds, Fassnacht, and Kennedy. With only 32 seconds left in the half and the ball at Barnstable's 32-yard line, Scituate's ran three consecutive pass plays. On first down, Kennedy just missed a long reception on a nice pass from Reynolds. A short pass from Reynolds to McInerney on second down set up a desperation heave by Reynolds on third down that was intercepted right before the half ended.

The second half began with a long kickoff return by Barnstable to Scituate's 46-yard line. The Sharks' defense then got the ball back after four downs to start their game winning touchdown drive. The key defensive play was Fassnacht's ability to haul down the tough Wattley just short of a first down at the Scituate 39-yard line.

After Scituate's touchdown and ensuing kickoff, Barnstable started a drive at their own 49-yard line with 1:36 left in the third quarter. The Sharks' defense appeared to be sensing a potential championship, as Nicholas Savage stuffed Wattley for no gain on first down. Jordan Berry and Carlezon made a nice gang tackle on Earnest on 2nd down after a 2-yard gain. Greg Reynolds then came up with big tackles on both third and fourth downs, forcing Barnstable to turn the ball back to Scituate on downs at the Barnstable 46-yard line.

Barnstable's defense held the Sharks at the Barnstable 38-yard line where the Silver Bullets took over on downs with 4:53 left in the game. On Barnstable's first down, a huge play was turned in by Scituate's Berry and Leary as they forced a fumble that was recovered by Leary. Scituate moved the ball to the Barnstable 34-yard line and looked ready to put the game away when a holding penalty and an illegal procedure penalty forced them all the way back to the Scituate 42-yard line where the Silver Bullets took over with 2:41 left in the game and a good opportunity to ruin the Sharks' Super Bowl dreams.

The Shark defense would allow no last second heroics for Barnstable. On 1st down, Patrick Ivens and Berry dragged down Earnest after a 5-yard gain. An illegal procedure penalty pushed the Silver Bullets back to the original line of scrimmage. On second down, McInerney and Carlezon made a game saving tackle on Earnest after he had already picked up 6 yards. On third down, the irrepressible Reynolds made a brilliant solo tackle on Wattley that pushed Barnstable all the way back to the Scituate 47-yard line. A desperation pass on fourth down was incomplete and the Sharks' celebration was ready to begin with only 43 seconds left in the game.

On a team on which all the players made significant contributions to the Sharks' season-long success, other strong on-field performances were turned in by players Ed Gorman, Brian DelGrosso, Casey Lind, Kevin Ayala, James Finnegan, Matthew Broderick, John Arnold, Christopher Munson, Cameron Prouty, Andrew Liberty, and Sean McQuaid.

At the end of the game, the Scituate players and coaches ran on the field in joyous celebration of their league title, as their cheerleaders and fans clapped loudly, aided by a chorus of cowbells. Coach Larry McInerney received a water cooler bath from his players before both teams convened at the middle of the field for the presentation of the Super Bowl trophy by Old Colony Youth Football League Vice President Joe Hughes.

Coach McInerney was ecstatic with his team's performance, "I can't describe the great feeling. It's been a long year, we've practiced hard, today was a defensive battle by both teams, and our kids gave everything they had until the game was over. I'm really happy for these kids to have such a rewarding season". Assistant coach George Reynolds, who oversaw the outstanding defense, echoed Coach McInerney's praise for the team, "This is a really nice group of kids, and they were easy to work with. Also, the parents were really supportive and helpful throughout the year. This has been a great season. Coach McInerney said he may even extend my contract".

Joe Hughes, VP of the league, stated that this has been another successful season for the Old Colony Youth Football League and praised the efforts and sportsmanship of both teams in the Super Bowl. In particular, Mr. Hughes noted the outstanding job by Coach McInerney and suggested he should be in line for Coach of the Year honors. Shark Greg Reynolds best summed up the Sharks' championship season when asked how it felt to make the Super Bowl clinching touchdown run, "It felt unbelievable"!

cessful season.

"They have been excellent both leadership-wise and example-wise," appraised Nigro. "The other senior contributors were midfielders John Hertig, Ted Gledhill and Ben Bixby, defenders Heath Heinze and Casy Brewer and standout goalie Nick Pestone.

Next year's season looks bright for the Skippers with a very good team returning and only the losing seven seniors.

Bilodeau and second year starter, sophomore Greg O'Connell, will lead the offensive charge, as that tandem combined for more goals than any other on the team.

Left-footed junior Tim Baird, a starter since his freshman year, will combine with Kinchla as the two remaining midfield starters. This year, both players, as well as the rest of the midfield squad, did a great job not only defending their own net, but attacking during possible scoring opportunities.

The defensive unit, consisting of exceptional juniors Steve Laney and Pete Maitland, as well as sophomore Robert Hickey, will try to fill the gaping hole that Shea will leave at the sweeper position.

Sophomore goalie Nick Spirito gained a lot of experience this year at the junior varsity, and even some at the varsity level, and he will most likely replace Pestone next year.

In addition to all of these playoff veterans, Cohasset will have a collection of young, talented players. Forward Chris Clarke was the only freshman called up from junior varsity this season, but a multitude of JV players should get the nod next year.

Many junior varsity players, such as freshmen David Santiago, Jessie Brewer and Connor Buick and sophomore Curt Kahn saw some varsity action, including some post-season playing time in the laugher over Nantucket.

step up."

Rolfe was referring to his strong defensive line, with tough linebackers in Cosimo Cambi and Ronan Buick, who have led the team in tackles this year.

But Cohasset has its own All-Star quality running back in senior captain Brian Krupczak, who is second in the league in both yards and touchdowns to Sault. This game will showcase the two top rated backs in Division four Massachusetts.

"Their statistics speak for themselves,' effused Rolfe, knowing that Hull's defensive scheme may very well be focused around stopping Krupczak.

"We will see who can take the other's tailback out of the game," he added.

But Krupczak felt that the game would not come down to a merely a test of running of the ball, as both teams have an arsenal of weapons.

"I don't think it will come down to just us," said Krupczak. "We both have very strong quarterbacks. It should be a multi-faceted game."

The quarterbacks that Krupczak is referring to are teammate Jason Brown and Hull's Rob Scully.

At halftime of the game, there will be a tribute to the memory of the Cohasset's long-time and beloved Athletic Director Clark Chatterton.

"This is really going to be a special day for a very special person in Cohasset's history," reported Cohasset Athletic Director Ron Ford. "We're planning something at halftime that we really hope will prove a fitting tribute to Clark's memory."

Ford didn't say what the ceremony entailed, but he did hint it would be "big".

"We just want to win the game for (Chatterton)," said Rolfe.

"He did so much for the school, having this tribute is the least we can do," added Krupczak.

Since most of the Skippers' seniors have only been playing for three years, they have only tied and beaten Hull. But previous to 1998, Hull beat Cohasset for 14 straight years.

"They are our next door neighbor," said Rolfe. "They have been putting the hurt on us for years, and we want to even the score."

So before you dive into your turkey and mashed potatoes, come and take part in some South Shore football tradition.

Chatterton to be honored at halftime

The Clark Chatterton Honor committee cordially invites one and all to attend the Thanksgiving football game at Alumni Field at 10 a.m. on Thursday, Nov. 23., where, at halftime, Cohasset's longtime Athletic Director will be honored. Chatterton succumbed to cancer this Summer.

"This is really going to be a special day for a very special person in Cohasset's history," said Athletic Director Ron Ford of his esteemed predecessor. "We're planning something at halftime that we really hope will prove a fitting tribute to Clark's memory.

"This is always the biggest game of the year, and we don't want to take away from that, but we're thinking this year that what we do at halftime will be the big event."

The annual Hull-Cohasset showdown kicks off at 10 a.m.. The gates to Alumni Field will be open at 9:15. Admission is $5 per person. Parking is available at both the high school and Milliken Field (the Bancroft Road gate will be open).

In addition, the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund has been established. This fund will be available to all Cohasset Middle/High School athletic teams, earmarked to cover expenses not included in the operating budget.

The fund-raiser will be threefold: 1. a kickoff one-time drive. 2. an annual 6K walk/run on the morning of Homecoming and 3. an annual Music Circus show with a block of tickets available to the public with an amount added to the Memorial Fund.

Contributions to the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund can be made: c/o Jack DeLorenzo, Cohasset Middle/High School, 143 Pond St., Cohasset MA 02025

Doctor uses reality to teach kids about smoking

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

There weren't any catchy slogans or scary real-life testimonials.

Instead the organizers of the Deer Hill School's anti-smoking presentation used an old-fashioned marketing technique — the truth.

To celebrate Great American Smoke-Out week, Deer Hill School sixth graders were treated to a presentation by South Shore Hospital anesthesiologist and Cohasset resident Dr. Cliff Breslow on the dangers and realities of smoking, that resulted in even the teachers learning something new.

"[People in advertisements] may look like they're enjoying it, but they don't tell you what happens in 20 years," said Breslow, who is also the head of South Shore Hospital's intensive care unit. "I have a lot of friends that smoked and they now have a lot of problems."

Breslow said in his job, he sees a lot of disturbing things that are the result of smoking addictions. He told the students of a man who recently left the hospital nearly two months after being in a car accident and receiving a tracheotomy. Breslow drew quite a reaction when he went outside to see the man off, he found him smoking a cigarette through the new hole in his throat because he was still addicted.

"He just couldn't stop," Breslow said.

Breslow, whose son Austin was in attendance, made a slide presentation going through some of the marketing techniques smoking companies have used over the years, and the untold behind-the-scenes horror stories. For instance the "Marlboro Man" died of lung cancer. A model, who smoked three packs a day to "stay thin," died at the age of 31. A past People magazine that had an informational feature on teen sex, featured 27 cigarette ads, as compared to the four normally found in the magazine, he said.

He also exposed some misconceptions such as that cigars, chewing tobacco, and marijuana are safe "alternatives" for cigarettes, and that filters take out just 1 percent of toxins found in cigarettes.

Aisling Guinee listens to Dr. Clifford Breslow of Cohasset talk about the evils of smoking. Dr. Breslow is showing the class an x-ray of a lung infected with cancer.

Breslow also showed actual x-rays of patients with lung cancer, including one of a 29-year old mother of a newborn who will probably die within the next six months from cancer.

Afterwards, Ms. Dickinson's class reflected on what they had just learned. Most said though they knew someone in their family who smoked, they still learned a lot from the presentation.

"I didn't know that 3,000 kids start smoking every day," said Aisling Guinee.

Bobby Meikleham didn't realize that it takes 10-19 seconds for nicotine to go from the cigarette to the smoker's brain, where it permanently remains.

Emily Coggins didn't like how some smoking victims have to eat through a tube in their stomach.

But the fact that no one knew, including Dickinson and her two female aides, was that more women die of lung cancer each year than of breast cancer.

Most students could also name an anti-smoking commercial currently running on television.

In the end, class members mostly agreed they'd never start smoking.

School board revisits Osgood technology position

Private funding on table

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For the second time this fiscal year, the Cohasset School Committee was asked to reconsider the elementary school technology instructor position axed during the budget process.

And for the second time, the answer was the same. The school department will not commit money from its budget to pay for the position, although it did not shut the door on using private funds for that purpose.

In June, Osgood parents presented a petition bearing the names of 158 people expressing their concern that Cohasset schoolchildren would fall behind in technology education. The position was cut last February from the $9.24 million budget to help the school department pay for three new teaching positions and an afternoon bus run for kindergartners.

At the committee's meeting last Thursday, Deer Hill PSO members Adrianne McCarthy and Susan Galligan once again asked the five-member board to consider either alternative fund-raising methods or using some of the $292,000 supplementary budget recently approved by the Oct. 23 town meeting, to pay for the position.

Town meeting appropriated the money in order fully fund the school budget. The majority of the $292,000 is earmarked for costs related to special education.

"We're currently not meeting the [technology] standard," said McCarthy. "The technology budget should be a priority rather than a transportation van." The school budget has $12,000 earmarked for the purchase of a 15-passenger van for the athletic department and other clubs.

Currently, Ken Cisneros oversees the Deer Hill and Osgood schools' technology departments, and serves as the lone full-time instructor for the schools' 700 students.

McCarthy said she and the Deer Hill PSO hoped the committee would consider the possibility of using outside funding for the position and commit to reinstating it by January. She said the PSO has an upcoming meeting with an organization in hopes of securing private funds for the position.

However, committee member Stephanie Noble was reluctant about committing to anything. "The outside funding is not yet received," she said. "It's still hypothetical."

But McCarthy was confident that the $12,000 needed to fund the position for the rest of the year, could be obtained. "The money is definitely there," she responded. "I'm fully confident the money will be there."

Committee Chairman Pat Martin defended the commitment to a school van, and said though the department had a bit of a windfall when it received more subsidy money from the state for the METCO program than expected, other issues take funding priority.

The town received an additional $50,000 from the state to be used to offset any costs incurred by Cohasset's participation in the METCO program.

"It's going to be spent according to the needs of the district. There are a number of things that have gone unfunded," she explained. "The money for transportation has already been committed as part of the transportation analysis." Martin said transportation for the town's athletic teams is a "big part" of the department's transportation budget. An analysis of the budget showed the money would be better spent on purchasing a 15-seat passenger van for smaller teams such as tennis or golf, rather than hiring a 60-seat bus for a 12-member team.

Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said private funding would be an acceptable way to fund the Osgood technology position, but only with a couple of restrictions. "The money would be for a one-year commitment, and the private group would have no control over the position," he said, adding if the position could be funded without any budget money from the school department, it would be possible to consider bringing in a second instructor.

Committee member Rick Flynn and parent Meg Bertolami also raised concerns about money being needed to make sure classroom supply cabinets remain stocked and reducing rising class sizes in the middle school where some classes seat up to 31 students.

Martin quickly brought an end to further discussion by saying the committee would not be delving back into a discussion of the budget. "We're not going back into the budgetary process," she said. Later in the meeting Martin said the committee is starting budget negotiations for Fiscal Year 2002, and urged parents to come forward now with their concerns, rather than "wait three months after the budget has been set."

HSO Yule concert

Hingham Symphony Orchestra invites music lovers from across the South Shore to celebrate the Yuletide season at their Welcome Yule. Concerts will be the first weekend in December. This year's concerts feature the new Hingham Symphony Chamber Singers, a 24-member chorus formed to perform Handel's "Messiah" with the orchestra. Audience members are welcome to join in singing the final Hallelujah chorus. Also on the program are Warlock's "Capriol Suite," with a 16th century dance flavor, and Finzi's 20th century cantata for voice and strings, "Dies Natalis." Concerts are held on Saturday, Dec. 2, at 7:30 p.m. at Old Ship Church in downtown Hingham, and on Sunday, Dec. 3, at 4 p.m. at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset. Tickets ($20 adults, $18 seniors, and $10 youth 18 and under) are available at Noble's Hingham Square and Cards & Shards, Cohasset Village, or call (781)740-5694 to reserve.

IT'S HAPPENING

Santa Claus

You better watch out because Santa Claus is coming to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Sunday, Dec. 17 at 3 p.m. for all children or adults who would like to visit with him.

Santa, accompanied by his "Elf who wouldn't wear tights," will entertain the children with holiday stories and lore. There will be a departing treat for all good boys and girls. Join us for this holiday visit.

Hire a teen

The 2001 Cohasset Appalachia Service Project volunteers have redesigned their fund-raising program. All their former Thanksgiving pie and bread customers will need to make other plans for this year. These 60 teenagers are, however, quite willing and eager to help out with fall cleanups and odd jobs. Teen volunteers can be hired for a minimum donation of $10 per hour per volunteer (checks payable to "Cohasset ASP"). They will rake leaves, stack wood, paint, offer computer help, serve a holiday party, make a major dump-run, etc. There are a limited number of volunteers and time available, so first come, first served. They will offer their services as long as there are volunteers available. Contact ASP at 383-0345 or CohassetASP@dreamcom.net or fax request to 383-7005. Visit the web site at CohassetASP.org.

Secret room

Cohasset ASP is once again helping out the annual village fair to be held on Cohasset Common, Saturday, Dec. 2, between the hours of 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Volunteers will continue their tradition of the Secret Room (at St. Stephen Church) where children, accompanied by an ASP teen-volunteer, may buy and wrap gifts for their siblings and parents. Santa Claus will also make his annual appearance on the common between the hours of 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Donna Green Studio to open

Saturday, Dec. 2, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., Donna Green will open her Cohasset studio to the public in celebration of the holiday season. In the true spirit of Christmas, there will be tasty confections, soothing music, and time to spend with the artist. Green's latest book "My Little Artist," will be on display as well as limited edition prints, cards, gifts, books and original paintings.

For those who have been waiting patiently for this year's hand-made treasures from young Monique, Bridget and Grace's Loft, you will not be disappointed. They have been working diligently to create an array of beautiful pieces of art to sell. The children will be donating a portion of their earnings to charity.

Among the many treasures to be found in this charming old studio is the actual velveteen rabbit, sitting on a small antique chair. Green's "Velveteen Rabbit" book has sold more than a million copies and is fast becoming one of the most sought after items in the shop. Warner Brothers has recently honored her by selecting this book to be used in Steven Spielberg's upcoming movie. For anyone wishing to have a number of books personalized, drop off or call in a list of names in advance so that Green can have them ready ahead of time. There will be extended hours between Thanksgiving and Christmas. Call ahead, (781) 383-2280, to check for these times.

Celebrate Family Literacy Month with book donations

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

We have a lot of wonderful things happening in our schools these days. This column is here for all of the staff, parents and children to let us know what is happening along with all the details needed to get the word out. Please send all information to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, mail it to me at 622 CJC Highway or phone it in at 923-1057.

This month is Family Literacy Month and all of our schools are working to celebrate this. If any of you have good, quality books that are looking for a new home, think about donating them to "Spread the Word," a book-recycling program run by Governor Cellucci. By donating these books, you will be helping needy children to receive five books right away to be taken home immediately. Please bring all books to the Osgood School where the children in Mrs. Owen-Rigby's class will collect, review, sort and pack them. Finally, a representative from the state Department of Education will pick up the books and distribute them to the recipient school. What a great way to start some needy children off in the wonderful world of reading.

If any of you out there have any coats, jackets, quilts or blankets just "hanging around," why not donate it to someone in need? If you have any of these items, please bring it to the Osgood School. It will warm the heart and body of the recipient and helps to spread the true meaning of this season.

Get ready for some shopping at the PSO Scholastic Book Fair being held on Nov 28, 29 and 30 in the library of the Osgood School. It will be open from 9-3 each day and has extended hours of 3-6 p.m. on Wed, the 29. This is one of PSO's biggest fund-raisers and all the proceeds go directly into the Osgood School fund. It really is a wonderful way to help support your local school and get some shopping done as well.

***

The School Council Meeting is being held on Tuesday, Nov. 28 in the Osgood Office. Public Comments are welcome from 3:30-3:40 p.m.

The Parent Advisory Council on Special Education in Cohasset will hold its first meeting on Wednesday, Dec. 6 at 7 p.m. in the Osgood Music Room.. Membership to PAC is offered to all parents of children receiving special education services or to other interested parents. For additional information, please contact Laura DeSisto at 383-6989 or Jamie Williams at 383-3075.

Don't forget to order your wreath or pillar candle for the holidays! The METCO program is offering fresh, high-quality Balsam wreaths from a prominent New Hampshire grower this year. Each wreath is double-faced and measures 22 inches in diameter. Also, new this year are pillar candles measuring 3x6 inches tall, are in a beautiful ivory color and are unscented. The cost for the wreath is $9 each and the candles are $10. Please make all checks out to the Cohasset PSO-METCO. All monies raised will go to the METCO Scholarship Fund.

Have a Wonderful Thanksgiving! Jennifer Piepenbrink All news can be sent to me in the following ways. email: jenpiep@yahoo.com send: 622 CJC Highway phone: 923-1057

Cohasset Arts Boosters Club seeks community support

The Cohasset Arts Boosters have helped the students of the arts at Cohasset High School since 1985. This is an organization of parents and friends of the arts who want to see that students have the support they need to showcase their talents. Art boosters provide support in two very important ways.

The first is financial. A fund-raising letter has been sent this week to all the parents with students at the high school asking for a donation. This money will be used to pay for such expenses as membership fees for the state drama festival, art and photography supplies for special projects which are not provided in the school budget, the publication of the student literary and arts magazine, "Whispers and Shadows," and two scholarships to graduating seniors and one undergraduate study award. The Boosters are one of the recipients of a grant from the South Shore Music Circus, which helps in funding some of the above projects.

The second way Boosters provide support is through planning and hosting several events during the year which provide a venue for talented singers, musicians and artists to perform in front of an audience. The Cabaret will be held in January and the Pops Night will be in May. If you would like to help with one of these events, call Donna O'Donnell, Arts Boosters President, at 383-6113.

If you would like to show your support by making a donation, you may send your tax deductible donation payable to Cohasset Arts Boosters Club, to: Mrs. Olga Nohe, Treasurer, 21 Whitney Woods Lane, Cohasset.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Band jam

Cohasset Youth Resources announces a Band Jam for grades 9-12, at the Garage featuring four local bands on Saturday, Dec. 2, from 6:30 to 10:00 p.m. Performing will be SWEEPS, Last Man Standing, Eat the Path, and Underprivileged.

Doors open and tickets go on sale at 6 p.m. and the first group kicks off at 6:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 per person and due to space limitations, the number of available tickets is limited.

Bands will have CDs available for sale during intermission breaks. Refreshments will also be available at the Garage.

The bands are volunteering their performances and proceeds from this event will be utilized for future events and activities at the Garage.

The Garage is located in downtown Cohasset, directly behind the Red Lion Inn, next to the town parking lot.

Food drive planned

The CHS student group, the Social Awareness Organization, has been participating in many recent activities in the community. In early October, members took part in the Making Strides Against Breast Cancer walk in Boston, as well as a walk benefiting the SIDS foundation in Hingham. They are planning more events in the upcoming weeks, including food and clothing drives planned for November and December.

There will be drop-off bins for both drives located at the main entrances of the Cohasset High School. The students would appreciate any help or support the community could offer.

Exact dates will be announced in coming weeks. The SAO will be continually updating their activities throughout the year to keep the community informed.

POLICE BRIEF

Police make arrest in station

For the second time in as many weeks, police made an arrest after the party came to the station on their own accord to report being the victim of a crime.

Last Tuesday afternoon, a 19-year-old Hull man came to the station to report a past break-in to his car.

The officer on duty said he smelled a strong odor of marijuana when the opened the door to the lobby.

When the officer went outside to examine the damage to the man's vehicle, he found a burned marijuana cigarette in the ashtray in plain view. Police placed Peter A. Villardi, 7 Old Colony Road in custody. After placing him in custody, a further search revealed he had a plastic bag containing marijuana in his possession.

Police charged Villardi with possession of a Class D substance. Sgt. Robert Jackson said at the arraignment the charges were continued without a finding for three months, which means if Villardi stays out of trouble, the charge will be dismissed at that time. Villardi has to pay $50 in court costs and $35 to the victim witness fund, police said..

Two weeks ago police arrested a Hull woman on drug charges after she came into the station to report that her pocketbook was stolen. Police suspect she came in on a ruse to get more pills after discovering a partially empty pill bottle and a small quantity of what is suspected to be heroin in the pocketbook that was still on the front seat of her car.

Holiday house tour in Hingham

The Hingham Mother's Club will host its annual Holiday House Tour on Sunday, Dec. 3, from noon to 4 p.m. Enjoy a memorable stroll through five beautifully decorated homes that will inspire you for the holidays. The five homes reflect a variety of architectural styles and a wonderful array of festive holiday decorations. Tickets are $15 in advance, $20 the day of the tour and may be purchased in Hingham at Treasures and Round Hill and in Norwell at Home Goods. Tickets will be available on the day of the tour at Brewed Awakenings in Hingham Square.

All proceeds from this event will benefit scholarships for high school seniors from Hingham.

The first home is a hip roof colonial originally built in 1982. It underwent a complete renovation just this year, including new wide-pine floors, moldings and kitchen. The country atmosphere will be decorated for the holidays with a "childlike Williamsburg Christmas" in mind. Topiaries created by Nancy O'Donnell Topiary Designs in Norwell add to the atmosphere.

The second home is a gambrel Cape in which the owners have tried to capture the simple elegance they found so inviting in their travels through Europe.

The third home is a Greek revival on lower Main Street traditionally decorated with an elegant and colorful flair. Features of this home include a spectacular living room with cathedral ceilings, long windows, dramatic draperies and antique furnishings.

The fourth home, also on Main Street, is a federal house built in 1810, as a simple, pure federal house but later additions have turned it into a lovely eclectic mansion.

The final home is a stick-style Victorian home, built in 1870, that abuts Broad Cove and overlooks Hingham Harbor. The house was once owned by the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who rumor has it, hosted post-concert parties that included celebrities such as Danny Kaye and Leonard Bernstein.

Illustrator to sign

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will host illustrator Karen A. Jerome on Saturday Dec. 2 from 2 – 4pm. "When It Rained Cats and Dogs" is a children's book based on a poem written by Nancy Byrd Turner in 1946. The poem tells the story of a day when it literally rained cats and dogs, each falling harmlessly into the arms of a child. The book features original full-color illustrations by Karen Jerome that realistically capture a variety of breeds while at the same time imparting a cheerful sense of fun. Jerome, a professional illustrator with a studio in the Boston area, will demonstrate the art of children's book illustration as well as to sign copies of the book. This book is the first title for Meadow Geese Press, which is located in Marshfield Hills. Free. Please call (781) 383-2665 for more information or to order your signed copy.

Conor's Definition of Hope:

"Clothes for the needy and food for the hungry"

– Conor, age 6

Hope comes in all kinds of packages, big and small and each person defines it in their special way. This holiday season, we're asking you to help those in need achieve their own definition of Hope by making a donation to Community Newspaper Company's (CNC) Gifts of Hope campaign.

For the past eight years, readers' Gifts of Hope donations have fed local hungry children and families in and around the Boston area. And now, more than ever, more people need your help. Please join the Cohasset Mariner in giving the greatest gift of all - the gift of hope. A donation of any size goes a long way in helping those in need. Here are some helpful statistics to keep in mind while planning your gift.

- $35 provides a family of three with groceries for one week
- $100 provides 600 pounds of food at a local food pantry
- $25 provides 50 meals for hungry people.

If you are looking to volunteer this holiday season, or are a non-profit organization in need of volunteers, log on to www.townonline.com/giftsofhope for local volunteer opportunities.

North Cohasset water rate hike is on the horizon

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though no longer the highest water prices in the nation, the North Cohasset's bloated water bills are about to go up again.

The Massachusetts-American Water Company that serves North Cohasset filed its intent to raise rates last week in an attempt to take in an additional $1,787,605 in annual revenue. The company cited $8 million in capital improvements to the system, an increase in capital depreciation rates, and a required change in billing rate structures.

"The increase we're asking for now isn't anything out of line considering the $8 million added in infrastructure and increase in cost of living," Massachusetts-American Water Company (MAWC) spokesman Keith Bossung said. "The actual increase from 1996 is not out of line in terms that the compounded rate of inflation has been 3 percent a year."

According to Bossung, the average water bill in the tri-town area would increase $26 a quarter, or $103 a year. He said if the average yearly bill is $639, it would be $742 after the increase. The MAWC also provides water to the towns of Millbury and Oxford. Those towns bills are slated to only rise $15 a quarter.

Bossung said the uneven increase stems from a "very large increase in capital commitment for service in the Hingham, Hull and Cohasset area."

Five years ago, in order to meet water treatment standards, MAWC built a $40 million treatment plant for the system that supplies 10,500 homes with water on the South Shore. Since then, Bossung said the company has made improvements to the Fulling Mill pumping station which helps pump water from Accord Pond in Norwell to the treatment plant, and improvements to the Beacon Road Booster Station in Hull.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said though the matter hasn't come before Cohasset selectmen yet, he fully expects the town to oppose the rate hike.

"We have had very good water quality since we've gone online," Bossung said. "Before there was a high iron quality [in the water]...Iron amenities are now filtered out and not noticed in the water at all."

Bossung also said the increase is needed because of a decrease in money available to cover depreciation costs in the system's capital. "The estimate we put on [capital depreciation] wasn't enough to cover the costs," he said.

He said a forced change in billable rates also requires MAWC to file for a rate increase. Currently, MAWC charges on a 'declining block rate structure' which, according to Bossung urges people to use more water by charging less per gallon as a customer uses more water. The company is being forced by the state Department of Environmental Protection to switch to a more conservation-friendly rate where water users aren't "financially encouraged" to use more water. However, the billing rate change will cost the company $40,000 annually. "It's not a significant dollar amount compared to the $1,787,605, but it's still something that has to be made up," Bossung said.

The rate increase still isn't definite as the MAWC must first go through a long application process with the Massachusetts Department of Telecommunications and Energy. The process includes a questioning period and a series of public hearings. Already Cohasset, Hingham and Hull have met to coordinate opposition to the rate increase.

MAWC provides water for around 500 customers in North Cohasset, said Bossung. The rest of the town is serviced by an in-town water department.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said though the matter hasn't come before Cohasset selectmen yet, he fully expects the town to oppose the rate hike.

Hingham and Hull are currently locked in a court battle with MAWC over what Hingham Town Administrator characterized as "excessive rates." Ratepayers have started to get some relief in their bills thanks to a state rate funded program that will lower bills by an average of $100 a year over the next eight years.

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who was instrumental in bringing the state rate relief program to fruition, said he is "disappointed and frustrated to see this potential rate increase which would wipe out all the hard work I put in [on behalf of obtaining] the more than $9 million [Massachusetts Water Pollution Abatement Trust] subsidy over the life of the program."

Of that amount $2.5 million was ear-marked for MAWC customers.

The appropriated funds were the result of legislation enabling MAWC's filtration plant project to qualify for financial assistance through the Drinking Water State Revolving Fund Program.

When President William Clinton signed legislation some time ago allowing states to create zero-interest drinking water revolving funds to help lower the cost of borrowing money for construction projects to improve water quality, the law did not grandfather in completed projects.

Hedlund co-sponsored a bill to create a safe drinking water revolving fund based on the federal model and recommended additional language to include completed projects such as Massachusetts-American's, thereby providing rate relief for customers.

Hedlund said he will meet with officials in all three towns about the proposed rate hike.

Tree lighting is November 26

The South Shore Community Center, Rusty Skippers Marching Band and First Parish Church invite everyone to a community tree lighting and carol sing-a-long at 3 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 26 on the town common. The Rusty Skippers will play a selection of Christmas music around the town Christmas tree. At dusk the tree will be lit for the season.

Immediately following the tree-lighting, all are invited for cocoa and goodies at the Parish House of First Parish (23 North Main St.). In the event of truly inclement weather, the Skippers will play inside the Parish House. Donations of a non-perishable food items for the Cohasset Food Pantry would be appreciated.

The Rusty Skippers will also be playing at noon on Saturday, Dec. 2 (Village Fair) inside the Meeting House on the Common.

Watch out for water damage

Poor drainage could hamper sale of your home

One of the things homebuyers should have on their minds is potential water damage to homes they are considering.

"It may come as a shock that about 60 percent of all houses in this country suffer from crawl space or basement problems," says Daniel DeSefano, president of the New England Chapter of the American Society of Home Inspectors.

"And, even in homes without basements or crawl spaces, excessive moisture can adversely affect ground level floors."

DeStefano points out that "Even dry weather is no guarantee of a dry basement. That's because water from underground sources can gradually enter through unnoticed cracks or joints where the floor meets the wall. The wetter the soil, chances are the more the flow of water. Poor ground surface drainage is the most frequent cause of water penetration," he said.

Most homebuyers know a musty smell and visible dampness are signs that water has been an unwelcome guest; but they lack the time or expertise to look for less obvious signs.

"What homebuyers need is a thorough inspection for visible evidence of water penetration, as well as any other potential problems that may exist," DeStefano recommends. "Get an impartial third party opinion provided by an expert in the field of home inspection."

According to DeStefano, there are steps a homebuyer can take to protect themselves from costly repairs involving water damage.

"Examine basements and crawl spaces, looking for possible trouble signs." Signs may include:

- Rust at the base of heating equipment or steel posts.
- Stains, discoloration, or decay on wood partitions, paneling and wood posts.
- Damaged floor tiles or mildewed objects and carpeting on floor.
- Evidence of water on foundation walls.
- Cracked or bulging foundation walls.
- Evidence of damage from insects.

"Knowing an otherwise desirable house is vulnerable to water damage isn't necessarily a deal breaker," DeStefano says.

"Water problems do not mean a house is poorly constructed. Water can appear in even the most well-built homes. A home inspector, however, can educate the buyer on the existing condition of a home so they can make a more informed decision."

There are remedies for solving water problems if a homebuyer

America's hometown for the holiday

Plymouth serves up a thanksgiving feast of events

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Don't get your feathers in a bunch if you missed last weekend's Thanksgiving parade in Plymouth—there is still a flock activities to celebrate the holiday running through the end of November.

"There's some really good stuff going on down here," said Olavo DeMacedo, chairman of America's Hometown Productions Inc., the Plymouth-based organization which helps coordinate much of the Thanksgiving celebration in Plymouth each year.

DeMacedo said one of the most significant parts of this year's celebration is the Native American cultural festival happening on the waterfront. The festival features various crafts and other cultural displays from local Indian tribes, and from tribes as far away as the southwest. The festival runs through tomorrow.

"Plymouth has a Thanksgiving celebration that no other place can have," DeMacedo said. "And the celebration gets more exciting every year. We're trying to bring people together on an international level."

Pilgrim Hall director Peggy Baker also gets into the holiday spirit, as the museum offers a number of thanksgiving-based exhibits. Currently, an exhibit called "The Great American Turkey" is on display illustrating the historical significance and importance of the bird the adorns our Thanksgiving tables.

"Plymouth has a Thanksgiving celebration that no other place can have—and the celebration gets more exciting every year."

-Olavo DeMacedo, chairman of America's Hometown Inc.

Baker said other fascinating items on display include the famous painting called "The First Thanksgiving in Plymouth" by Jennie Brownscombe and even a unique portrait of pilgrim Edward Winslow.

"It's the only portrait of an original settler that was painted from life," Baker said. She added the museum has a plethora of other Thanksgiving displays. And the best part is that the museum will be open from 9:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. on Thanksgiving Day.

Baker said she feels that one of the unique aspects of the Plymouth Thanksgiving celebration is that many of the museums and other people sponsoring exhibits keep in touch—not to mention the fact that America's Hometown Inc. helps tie up loose ends in terms of celebration organization.

"We all pretty much support each other," Baker said. "But people usually notice Pilgrim Hall on their own. The truth is that we all coexist very nicely."

The Mayflower II sails as gracefully as the original did nearly 400 years ago. Today, the museum ship remains as a solid reminder of Thanksgiving and the events surrounding it.

This continues our on-going campaign to recognize local teens who give back to their communities. Watch for a new Spirit of Community feature each month in Living. We welcome your nominations. Please see our ballot on page 4.

Chris Brennan thrives on community service. In fact, he wants to build his life around it.

"You can learn a lot about people by working with them in different situations," Brennan said.

Brennan, a 17-year-old Pembroke resident, goes to Cardinal Spellman High School in Brockton. Although he is young, he has a firm understanding of what it means to be human.

"I've lived across from him his whole life, and he's just an all-American kid who loves to help people out," said Brennan's neighbor Kathy Fanning. "He's a leader in a very quiet way, a man of few words. He's not someone who needs all the attention."

People who know Brennan say many of the same things—they refer to him a "gentle giant" who just so happens to be a captain on the Cardinal Spellman football team. They refer to him as a generous indi-

Thanksgiving 101

Last year in this column, I offered a Thanksgiving cheat sheet of last minute tips for making cooking easier around the holidays. Due to its popularity, I am offering an updated version for this year, complete with quick tips, shortcuts and well-tested advice taken from the test kitchens of Cook's Illustrated magazine. You can also go directly to our Thanksgiving Web site — www.turkeyhelp.com — for more information and recipes or to our main Web site at www.cooksillustrated.com.

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

What size bird is best?

Smaller is better. A 20-pound bird takes so long to cook that the breast meat usually dries out. It is also virtually impossible to turn in the oven. If you have room in your oven, roast two 12-pounders instead of one behemoth. A 12- to 15-pound bird will serve 10 to 12 people.

What are giblets?

In the cavity, you will find giblets, which consist of the neck, the heart, the gizzard (part of the stomach used for grinding up food) and the liver. The giblets (except for the liver which has a very strong flavor) can be used to make a stock, the basis for gravy.

How do I get perfectly cooked white meat and thoroughly cooked dark meat?

The best method is to soak the bird in salted water (this is called brining) for a few hours before roasting. This adds moisture and flavor to the white meat, making it virtually impossible to overcook. Simply immerse the turkey in two gallons of cold water mixed with two cups of table salt (or four cups of kosher salt) in a beer cooler for four hours. (Add some ice cubes or a few freezer packs as well.) Thoroughly rinse the bird and pat dry before roasting. You can also brine overnight. Simply cut the salt in half (use only one cup of table salt). Be sure to keep the turkey between 30 and 40 degrees during the brining. A garage works well in cold weather.

What if I do not want to brine the bird?

If you do not wish to brine the bird, whether it is large or small, start roasting at 350 degrees for one hour breast-side-down, reduce the temperature to 250 degrees and cook until the breast meat reaches 140 degrees (time will vary depending on the size of the bird). Increase the oven to 400 degrees to finish, roasting the bird breast-side up.

Should I stuff the bird?

Stuffing slows down the cooking of the dark meat. It must also reach 160 degrees to be safe to eat. Since the stuffing cooks more slowly than the meat itself, this almost guarantees that the white meat will be overcooked by the time the breast meat is ready. The solution? Bake the stuffing separately for 25 minutes in a 375 degree oven using a roasting pan covered with foil. Remove the foil and bake another 15 to 20 minutes or until browned on top and hot.

What if I want to stuff the bird?

The problem with stuffing is that it takes a long time to bring it up to 165 degrees, the temperature considered safe by the USDA. By that time, the white meat is often overcooked. The solution? Preheat the stuffing in a microwave oven on full power for six to eight minutes, or until it reaches 120 to 130 degrees. Placing the stuffing in a cheesecloth bag (you can buy them or make one yourself) before heating makes removing stuffing easier.

How do I set up the roasting pan and rack?

Use a shallow pan, no more than 3 inches high, and a fixed V-rack. Higher sides will slow down the cooking process.

How do I turn the bird while roasting?

This is one reason a small bird is preferable. You can purchase turkey forks designed for this purpose (they cost about $3) but beware — we find that they break after one or two uses. The simplest solution is to hold the turkey with a wad of moistened paper towels in each hand. Be sure to remove the turkey and pan from the oven before turning.

Should I baste the turkey?

Butter, rather than oil or pan drippings, is best for basting. Do not baste during the last hour of roasting; if you do, the skin will not crisp.

How long does it take to roast a turkey?

If you brine a 12- to 15-pound bird, roast it unstuffed at 400 degrees for about two hours, starting breast-side down for 45 minutes, then one side up for 15 minutes, the other side up for 15 minutes, and then breast-side up to finish. For a larger brined unstuffed bird, start at 350 degrees for one hour breast side down, turn oven down to 250 degrees for two hours, and then turn the bird breast side up and raise the oven temperature to 400 degrees to finish.

How do I get a really crisp skin?

After brining the bird for four hours (use two gallons of cool water and two cups of table salt or four cups of kosher salt), rinsing and patting dry, let the turkey sit uncovered in the refrigerator on a flat wire rack sitting on a jelly roll pan or roasting pan. This will "air dry" the skin which will turn out extra-crisp.

How do I know when the turkey is done?

The only reliable method is to use an instant-read thermometer. (Pop-up timers are notorious for "popping" when the white meat is overcooked.) The breast meat should read 165 degrees, the thigh should read 170 to 180 degrees, and the stuffing should reach 165 degrees. If you don't have an instant-read thermometer, the most reliable method is to wiggle the legs. If they move freely, the bird is done.

What brand of instant-read thermometer should I buy?

In ratings done at Cook's Illustrated, the top-rated model was Owen Instruments' Thermapen 5 which can be ordered for $79.95, item 4325, from King Arthur Flour's mail-order service or online (800-827-6 8 3 6 6 ; www.kingarthurflour.com). For a less expensive option, our "Best Buy" thermometer was the Taylor Instant Read Digital Pocket Thermometer, Model 9840, which can be purchased for $14.99, SKU 573463 from Kitchen etc. (800-232-4070; www.kitchenetc.com).

Does the turkey need to rest after roasting?

Yes. This allows the juices to redistribute throughout the turkey. Allow 20 minutes and tent the bird loosely with aluminum foil.

What is the best way to carve a turkey?

Remove both the wings and the legs first. This is done by pulling them back against the bird and cutting through the joints. The leg, for example, will actually pop out of the joint if pulled down and back under the bird. There is very little "carving" at this point. Next, remove each breast in one piece. This is best done with a smaller knife. Finally, slice the breast meat across its length. I find that an electric knife actually works quite well for this task.

How do I make a quick cranberry sauce?

Here is a quick and easy recipe we developed for the holidays.

Quick and Easy Cranberry Sauce

This recipe is quite similar to the one found on the back of the Ocean Spray bag.

3/4 cup water
1 cup sugar
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 12-ounce bag cranberries, picked through

Bring water, sugar and salt to boil in medium non-reactive saucepan over high heat, stirring occasionally to dissolve sugar. Stir in cranberries; return to boil. Reduce heat to medium; simmer until saucy, slightly thickened and about two-thirds of the berries have popped open, about five minutes. Transfer to non-reactive bowl, cool to room temperature and serve. (Can be covered and refrigerated up to seven days; let stand at room temperature 30 minutes before serving.)

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 22

At 3:18 a.m. the Libra moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A creative Venus/Mars alignment comes together at 8:43 a.m. No major planetary activity occurs after that. This is a day to catch up on unfinished business, handle routine chores and errands, clean and reorganize.

Kick back, relax; enjoy favorite leisure activities and friends this evening.

THURSDAY, NOV. 23

The moon enters Scorpio at 2:33 a.m., generating a serious, methodical mood. If you can, take time out for yourself; pursue activities that help you to relax and stay positive. Others may be critical, pensive, difficult to get along with. A lunar alignment to Neptune can make for a sleepy, slow-starting morning. However, this influence passes over by noon, and an applying alignment of Mars and Pluto brings an energy boost in the afternoon and evening.

FRIDAY, NOV. 24

This day has its challenges. The dark side of a new moon is a time for cleaning out, letting go, preparing for new starts. The moon continues its travel in hypersensitive Scorpio. In addition, an applying alignment of the communication planet, Mercury, to unpredictable Uranus impacts the day. Do not make important decisions, sign contracts, launch ventures. Keep it light. Choose your words carefully. Impulse spending is definitely off limits. Plan a quiet evening. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

SATURDAY, NOV. 25

Wake up in a good mood. Take it slow and easy. The Scorpio moon aligns with Saturn at 4:52 a.m. and becomes inactive. A volatile 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Uranus comes together at 6:01 a.m. The moon enters Sagittarius at 10:33 a.m., and the new moon culminates at 6:11 p.m., 4-degrees of Sagittarius. Lunar alignments to Neptune and Jupiter this evening prompt you to forget your troubles and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, NOV. 26

Astrological storm clouds move in again this morning, when the moon aligns with Pluto. This planetary combination may bring up powerful issues, deep emotions; resentments can surface. Stay calm and keep the avenues of communication open. Fortunately, this influence passes over quickly, and the afternoon and evening rate high for fun and games. Harmonious contacts to Mars and Uranus bring out the best of the Sagittarius moon. At 7:57 p.m. the moon becomes inactive.

MONDAY, NOV. 27

This is a great day for vacationing. The Sagittarius moon continues inactive travel until 8:57 p.m., generating an upbeat mood. In addition, the sun aligns with Jupiter, the planetary ruler of Sagittarius. If you are working, it may be difficult to be motivated, disciplined, focused on business. To avoid spinning your wheels, you must have a clear plan of action and stick to it. This is not a day to start new projects, make important decisions. Influences turn around at 8:57 p.m., when the moon enters pragmatic Capricorn.

TUESDAY, NOV. 28

The moon travels in business-oriented Capricorn today and tomorrow. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. Influences today are best for cleaning out, reorganizing, finishing projects already begun and clearing the way for new starts. An applying alignment of Mercury/Saturn also affects this period, because Saturn is the planetary ruler of Capricorn. It is best to postpone signing contracts or starting important projects until next week, when more favorable planetary alignments occur.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 29

The combination of a Capricorn moon and applying Mercury/Saturn opposition impacts the day. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. Stop worrying about situations you have no control over. Instead, take on a full agenda; stay busy with practical projects. Zero in on jobs that have been left hanging; follow through and tie up loose ends. You can be most productive. Influences this evening are best for working. Plan to burn the midnight oil and get work or study projects out of the way.

THURSDAY, NOV. 30

Conflicting planetary influences can make for a challenging day. The Capricorn moon becomes inactive at 2:34 a.m. until 9:26 a.m., when it enters freedom-loving Aquarius. However, a Mercury/Saturn polarity prepares to culminate tomorrow. It may put a damper on today's mood and activities. Allow extra time for unexpected delays, setbacks, obstacles. You may be forced to face the realities of a career or domestic matter. Keep an open mind. Look for new, innovative solutions.

America's hometown for the holiday

And what would be a Thanksgiving celebration without a trip to Plimoth Plantation? Like Pilgrim Hall, the Plantation will be open for Thanksgiving Day.

"Thanksgiving Day and the day after that are two of our busiest days," said Plimoth Plantation spokesperson Carol City. "People like to come down here and talk to the pilgrims who work here. It's a very festive atmosphere, and everyone always seems to be a good mood."

City said people can just come down to the Plantation, walk around, and enjoy some hot chocolate, some cider, chowder, and even cocktails.

Ocean Spray's Cranberry World will celebrate our local crop and share with the public the story behind the berry we serve each Thanksgiving.

"Our museum gives the public an opportunity to learn about the history and the story behind the cranberry," said Hellen Laukkanen, a tour guide at Cranberry World. "We're in the heart of cranberry country here in Plymouth, and people always seem to be impressed when they find what the industry is all about. And this is a great place to go on Thanksgiving, because cranberries not only fit into the pilgrims' lifestyle, but the Indians' lifestyle as well."

Finally, enjoy a Thanksgiving night out, on the town by taking a lantern tour of the historic district, offered by Plymouth resident Dan Finn. The tours are available every night of the year—tours start at 4p.m. and continue on the hour through 8 p.m..

"I started doing the tours 14 years ago," Finn said. "And they've always been popular, especially on Thanksgiving. "It's basically just a tour of the various monuments and historic districts in Plymouth, and people carry lamps while they walk."

Other places in Plymouth offering Thanksgiving activities include the National Wax Museum and Memorial Hall.

For more information on America's Hometown Inc. or the places participating in the Plymouth Thanksgiving celebration, call them at (508) 746-2334 or log onto their website at www.ThanksgivingUSA.com. Other numbers include Pilgrim Hall at (508) 746-1620, The National Wax Museum at (508) 746-6468, Cranberry World at (508) 747-2350, or Plimoth Plantation at (508) 746-1622. Finn can be contacted at (508) 747-4161 for lantern tours.

vidual, always active in various school outreach programs. Many people also note that Brennan is very active in his church, St. Thecla's in Pembroke, where he often serves as an altar boy and a Eucharistic Minister.

But most of all, people know Brennan as someone who epitomizes the term "community service."

For the past two summers, Brennan has participated in what is called the Appalachian Service Project. Brennan explained that the project entails going to a community in Appalachia for 10 days and helping the less-fortunate to restore their decaying homes.

Brennan traveled with about 80 other individuals who were his age when he embarked on his Appalachian journey.

"The first summer I went to Kentucky," Brennan said. "The second summer, I went to West Virginia." Brennan added he will involve himself in the project again this summer, when the group travels to Tennessee.

Aside from the communities covered by the service project, Brennan said he also traveled to third world country in August when he visited Ecuador with a small group of students through the outreach program at his school. There, he worked in a hospital helping people with leprosy.

"I didn't know what to expect when I went to the hospital," Brennan said. "But when I got there, and started talking to some of the people, I realized why I had come in the first place. The people in there were pretty inspiring."

While his group was there, they managed to paint the outside of the whole hospital. In addition, Brennan and his friends enjoyed mixing in with the natives.

"They don't have much over there in Ecuador," Brennan said. "But those people are happy. I'd love to go back there sometime."

Aside from keeping himself involved with various outreach projects, Brennan also likes playing various sports including football and baseball, spending time with friends, and just keeping himself busy.

"I'm not the kind of guy that's just going to sit around," Brennan said.

"Community service is definitely going to be a part of his life," said Ann Brennan, Chris' mother. "He's planning on concentrating on criminal justice in college, but he's thinking about finding a Catholic college that offers a number of community service programs."

Chris noted he is currently looking at colleges like Northeastern University in Boston, Assumption in Worcester, and Sacred Heart in Connecticut.

Ann added she often accompanies the groups on the Appalachian Service Project, and she did so the two years which Chris went.

"To see that child out of his normal routine of school doing what he was doing was just absolutely amazing," she said. "I'm very proud of him. Not many kids his age are doing what he does so often. Chris really has a handle on his spirituality, and in addition, he has a great personality. People accept him for who he is."

Chris Brennan

"Three things that Chris really has a grasp on in his life are family, community, and church," said Bob Brennan, Chris' father. "Those values were instilled in him in the very beginning, and he's just kept them up on his own."

Bob added "He's never really been a leader, but most importantly, he's never been a follower. He's always followed his own convictions despite what others say. He's not likely to be influenced by the masses."

"He's just a great kid that would do anything for anyone," said Cindy Dacey, Chris' Appalachian Service Project group leader. "He's also very funny. He's got a dry sense of humor with a quick sense of wit. Kids really look up to him, and he's a great role model for all of them."

"Chris is very much committed to helping and serving others," said Deacon Joe Nickley, the director of campus ministry at Cardinal Spellman. "But even though he's great at helping people out, he's also a very good football player. Chris and I have had some great talks. He's just someone who leads by example for others—I've never seen him in an argument with anyone. He's a peacemaker. Most of all, he's very aware that he has a responsibility to help others, and he takes that very seriously."

Nickley added "I see him working in a help-oriented profession down the road. It just brings him joy when he helps others. And like many people say, I think one of the best ways to describe him is as a gentle giant."

Realty Guild summit

More than 40 owners of top real estate offices in Massachusetts gathered at the Stage Neck in York Harbor, Maine for the annual Realty Guild Summit. The summit presented guild members with cutting edge information on the industry, covering subjects such as technology, the mortgage industry, new office structures, marketing, disclosure and procuring cause.

Experts including attorneys Philip S. Lapatin and Steve Ryan, Boston Globe real estate editor Ron Hutson and Anne Rendle, CEO of the Northeast Association of Realtors, shared their insights. Also, members including David Drinkwater of Coastal Countryside Properties and Audrey Macdonald and Donna Wood of Macdonald and Wood, contributed their extensive knowledge.

The Realty Guild, an association of 67 prominent real estate offices across the state, did more than $2.4 billion in business in 1999. Its more than 730 sales agents, who are dedicated to offering exceptional professional service in more than 162 towns, represent the best in independent brokerage.

Golf tournament raises $11,000 for shelter

Jack Conway & Co. recently presented a check for $11,000 to Brockton's MainSpring House homeless shelter. The funds were raised during the charity golf tournament, hosted each year by the state's largest independently owned realty company.

Conway vice president of sales Denis Lilla delivered the donation to Dennis P. Carman, executive director of the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless and Julie Vaitkus, director of volunteers and donations for the BCH.

More than 150 golfers, representing 50 Boston and South Shore businesses, participated in the 16th annual MainSpring Charity Open Golf Tournament, held at the Easton Country Club.

IN BRIEF

Holiday performance to benefit MainSpring

A holiday festival performance of Charles Dickens' classic story "A Christmas Carol" will benefit the MainSpring House homeless shelter and The Charity Guild food pantry.

The special show, hosted by the Jack Conway Company, will be held Thursday, Nov. 30, at 7:30 p.m. at the Company Theatre (formerly the Nickerson Theater) in Norwell.

Tickets are $50 per person and the price includes an invitation to a pre-show reception at the theater beginning at 7 p.m. All proceeds from the performance will go to the two South Shore charitable organizations.

The Brockton Coalition for the Homeless operates MainSpring House in Brockton, which provides shelter, food, educational programs and counseling to individuals and families in need. MainSpring houses as many as 60 homeless individuals per night; Conway House in Middleboro provides shelter for 13 homeless families in a residence on East Grove Street.

The Charity Guild Inc. is a Brockton-based non-profit organization that provides food, clothing and donated household items to low-income individuals and families throughout the region. The group operates a food pantry and thrift store on North Main Street. It receives no state funding and pays for its programs through the generous contributions of its members, area residents and local businesses.

Requests for tickets can be sent with payment to MainSpring/Charity Guild, c/o Jack Conway & Co., 137 Washington St., Norwell, 02061. For more information, call Chris Haraden at Conway, (781) 871-0080, Ext. 316.

A condo for a college student is a good idea

Purchase could be sound investment

By Marilyn Jackson
STAFF WRITER

In one of the tightest real estate markets the Boston area has seen and an apartment vacancy rate of less than 1 percent, parents and college students are always scrambling for housing.

Students start college and many of them, after several weeks, decide they don't like dorm living.

Lots of South Shore students choose to commute to their Boston colleges but still others have found a solution: Buy a condo.

It's not so far-fetched, and many Boston area real estate brokers have been marketing to parents of college students for several years.

"The first two condos I sold in 1989 were to parents of a student who was attending Northeastern University," said Lawrence Fisch of Boston's Preferred Properties on Westland Avenue in the Fenway.

One unit, he recalled, was at 79 Gainsborough St., which sold for $154,000. Today, he said it would be offered at $260,000.

"Their son had lived in it, and after college, they kept it as a rental property. For them, it was an extremely good investment," said Fisch.

Another condo, a two-bedroom duplex, also on Gainsborough Street, was purchased by a family whose two sons came from Hong Kong to attend school. After the second son graduated, the parents sold the home three or four years ago, said Fisch, who could not remember the selling price.

"From a financial position, someone who has the ability to purchase a piece of real estate, given the rental situation, can financially benefit significantly within three to four years," he said.

Said Christopher Horan of Symphony Properties in the Fenway, "There has been a steady increase in the last five to six years of parents buying condos.

"Typically, they are buying a two-bedroom [unit], where their son or daughter lives in one and rents the other to one or two [roommates]. They are finding that the cost they have in renting to one or two roommates is cheaper than [having their student] living on his own and renting or going into student housing.

"Besides they are getting tax write-offs," said Horan.

Typically, he said that two-bedroom apartments in the Fenway are renting from between $1,800 to $2,400 a month and may include a fireplace or a private deck, with air conditioning and a washer/dryer.

"And it's not just students" who are seeking condos, he continued. "There are more professionals, and we are drawing people from the Back Bay and the South End, where the values are much stronger. These professionals are living and working in the Longwood area," where Beth Israel Hospital and the Dana Farber Cancer Institute are located.

"People who bought in '95, '96 and '97, who bought housing for their students and sold when they graduated, found that the appreciation not only paid for the housing but a good portion of the tuition," he said.

Annette Given of The Charles Realty said she has found parents and their college students looking beyond the Fenway/Kenmore area where there is a concentration of colleges.

"They go everywhere, but basically, they are looking for convenience to their classes, for security and for low maintenance," said Givens.

She too said this trend was not a new phenomenon. "A lot of times, I've shown rentals to students and their parents, and they would decide to buy when they saw how expensive rentals were compared to what they could buy. You didn't get much for the money in a rental," she said.

"Whenever there has been a solid market, a good market, there's a small part of the marketplace where parents are thinking their kids will be there temporarily, but this is a solid investment. And the kids haven't always been college students; they may be interns in hospitals," said Chobee Hoy of Chobee Hoy Associates Real Estate of Brookline who works primarily in the Brookline, Newton, Allston-Brighton and Jamaica Plain area.

She said these homes tend to be closer to Boston College and Boston University. They want to be reasonably close to where they are working or going to school. "They have long hours, and it's nice to be near the T," she said.

What Fisch has noticed is that this particular real estate market is being propelled by owner-occupancy.

"It's different from the last real estate boom, where investors and speculators were buying the condos.

"In the '80s, people spent first. Then, in the early '90s, after the real estate market crashed, there was a tremendous amount [of property] picked up by investors.

But as the decade progressed, and people "started saving, they began to buy condos – to live in, not to rent out," he said.

As more and more condos turn into owner-occupied units, the number of available apartments has declined, which, in turn, puts more pressure on that market and pushes up rents.

"Investors don't purchase condos in this market," Fisch added. "An owner-occupant pays more than an investor would; an investor is looking for a certain return."

For Jim Horan, a self-employed Stoughton businessman, buying a condominium for his older daughter, Jocelyn, a middler student at Northeastern University, majoring in physical therapy, makes perfect sense.

"I wanted to control the costs [of her housing]," said Horan, "and I know it's a very good investment.

"The Boston housing values are increasing, and the best way to lock in your costs is to purchase.

"I don't believe it will be more expensive than living in a dorm. With this type of transaction, where you're fixing your costs for the next four years, you are giving yourself some control. Over your daughter's destiny.

"We've paid for dorms for two years, and we know she's going to go the full six years [of the program]. It just makes sense to purchase."

Rent vs. own

If you rent a high-end, two-bedroom apartment for $2,400 a month for three years, in the course of a year, you'd pay $28,800.

In three years, that's $86,400 you'll never see again, says Lawrence Fisch, owner of Boston's Preferred Properties, who has been selling condominiums to parents of students attending college in Boston, like Wentworth or Simmons or Berklee or Northeastern. Boston has about three dozen colleges and universities within its borders.

And, in order to rent, a tenant would have to come up with $9,600 – first and last month's rent, plus security and an agent's fee, he said.

"More than likely, you would have one or two roommates, so you would have to be responsible for half or a third of the rent," he said. But whatever the rental costs, that money goes into the landlord's pocket.

On the other hand, if a parent is playing landlord, he gets the write-off, based on the interest paid on the mortgage. And, if he bought it as an investment, there would be a depreciation allowance.

If it is purchased as a second home and is in the son or daughter's name, the capital gains expense can be avoided when it is sold, said Fisch.

A two-bedroom condo, with the same amenities as the apartment, would sell for $280,000, said Fisch.

By putting 20 percent or $56,000 down and financing the balance of $224,000 for 30 years at an interest rate of 8.25 percent, the monthly cost would be $1,682.24, said Fisch. The condo fees and the real estate taxes probably would total something less than $450 a month, he sug-

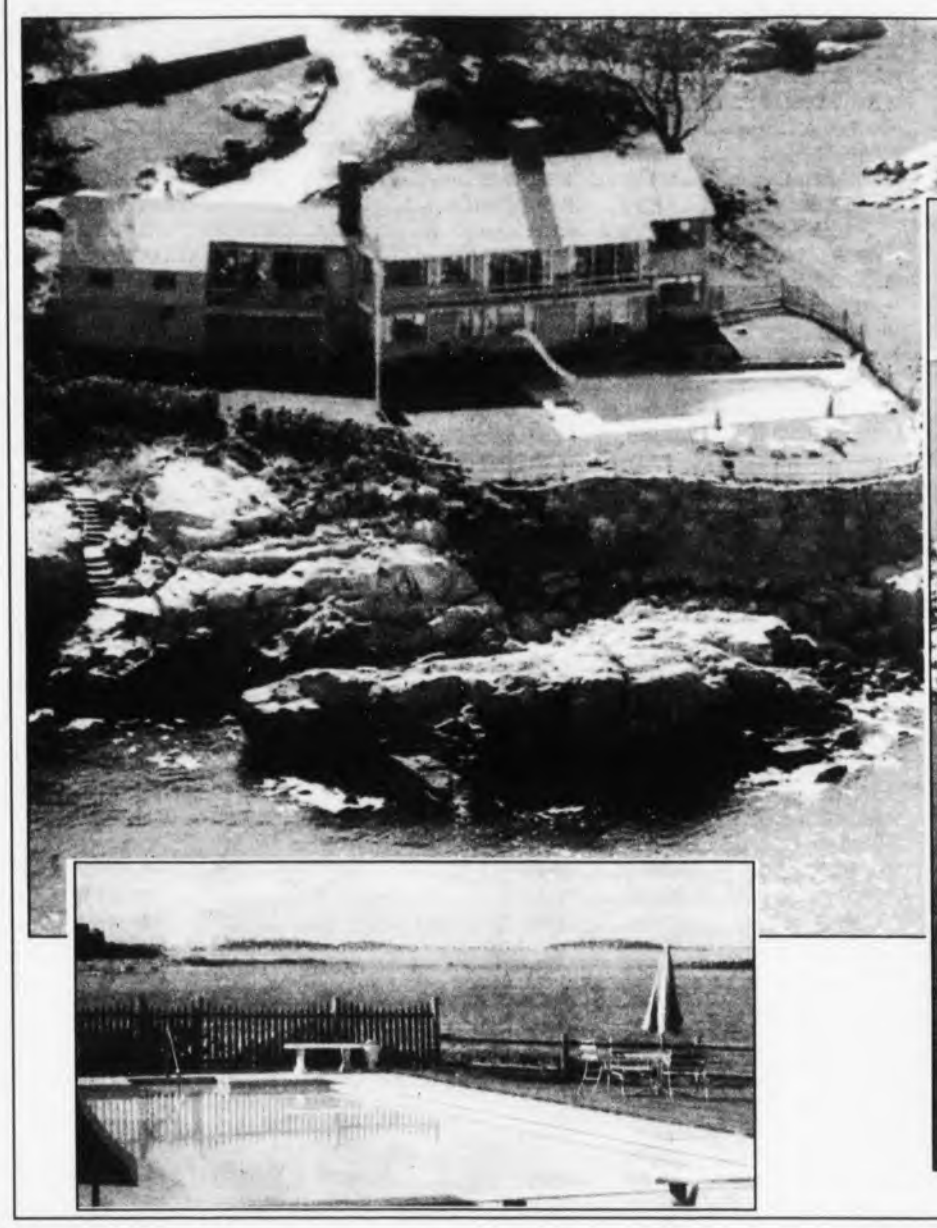
Prime Real Estate

On the Gold Coast



Living in Cohasset is special. The unparalleled beauty, special vistas, stately mansions and Colonial charm are complemented by excellent schools, solid town government, modern facilities and beautiful homes in attractive neighborhoods.

This expanded Royal Barry Wills Cape-style home was built in 1960 along the scenic coastline on prestigious Jerusalem Road. The location is considered one of the town's finest. Majestically set overlooking the Atlantic Ocean affording views from Minot Light to Boston and beyond.

Enjoy the exceptional sunsets from the three-season porch or decks overlooking the lovely in-ground pool and professionally landscaped grounds.

The interior consists of four bedrooms, family room, front-to-back living room, gracious dining room with built-in china cabinet, library and a large country kitchen with fireplace and beamed ceiling leading to a greenhouse. Most of the principal rooms have walls of glass to take advantage of the unobstructed water views. Other fine features include hardwood floors, three fireplaces and central air on the main living area.

This is the first offering in 30 years.

Europe's best cities in a week

George Hobica

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I'm visiting Europe for the first time and I can only stay for one week. This will probably be the only chance I have in the foreseeable future to see Europe. I know this is a tough question, but what cities should I visit? I'll be traveling with my boyfriend.

A. What I'm about to suggest may sound like unconventional wisdom, but if I had just a week and I wanted to see Europe's best face I'd visit Paris, Venice and Prague. These are without a doubt Europe's three most beautiful and romantic cities. You'll end your trip thinking that the Continent is a very special place. To get between cities, look for cheap air fares from Europe by Air at www.europebyair.com . Taking the train would probably consume too much travel time.

Q. Can you recommend a cruise to the Mexican Riviera departing from Los Angeles or San Diego?

A. You may want to consider testing the waters, so to speak, with one of the three- or four-day Mexican Riviera cruises offered by Royal Caribbean, which I've done and enjoyed, and Carnival. Both also do one-week itineraries. Princess has some one-week Mexican Riviera sailings on the newer ships like the Ocean Princess, Sea Princess and Dawn Princess. If you don't mind spending the bucks, you can do a one-week Crystal cruise. A travel agent specializing in cruises would be your best resource.

Q. Do you have any information regarding smaller cruise ships (700 passengers or so)? I realize that they have mainly larger ships available now, however, we were thinking of a European or Australian cruise where we could be pampered more without the sticker shock of some of the pricier ships. I'd appreciate any suggestions on any current smaller ships that you may have.

A. There are so many ships under 700 passengers, which isn't really all that small. I consider 700 passengers a mid-sized ship. According to Fran Golden, author of "Cruise Vacations for Dummies," you may want to consider Radisson, which is still upscale, but less expensive than Seabourn, Crystal or Silversea.

"You also may want to look at Renaissance Cruises, which has 684-passenger ships, and maybe some of the European lines like Costa," she advises.

I've been on the Radisson ships and can recommend them.

Q. I am a member of Air Canada's Aeroplan frequent flyer program. I don't travel very often but I try to collect some mileage whenever I can. In the statement, there are two kinds of miles: "qualifying miles" and "mileage balance." Can you help me to find out why there are two different kinds of mileage, and which are the actual miles that I can claim? Also, is there an expiration date for the miles? I have tried calling Aeroplan many times, but I could not get a live person on the phone.

A. Air Canada recently consolidated all the calls for Canadian Airlines, which may explain the amazingly long (more than an hour!) hold time that I experienced as well. Qualifying miles are the miles that you earn from your last flight with Air Canada or one of its partners. Mileage balance is the total miles you have accumulated over the years; that's the amount you look at when you want to redeem a award. There is no expiration date for Aeroplan's miles as long as your account has some form of activity, whether it's accruing new miles or using the miles for a ticket. Each time there's activity in your account your balance mileage is extended three more years.

Have a travel question? George Hobica can be reached via e-mail at hobica@aol.com or in care of this newspaper.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Robert De Niro and Cuba Gooding, Jr., prepare for a bit a Navy business.

Men of Honor (B)

Cinema is of its era. "Birth of a Nation" glorified the Ku Klux Klan and cast a jaundiced eye on the unpopular notion of racial equality, as the movies of the '20s, '30s '40s and even '50s made of blacks what Spike Lee's problematic but important "Bamboozled" showed us: pathetics, toadies, bug-eyed cowards, loyal retainers, ne'er-dwells. Granted, this is painting with a broad brush, but when we scrutinize subsequent decades we see a gradual incorporating into film of the ideological fixations of the makers of film, which are increasingly liberal, assimilationist, now subservient to a take on history 180 degrees removed from that of older films. If one doubts for a nanosecond the overwhelming Hollywood adoration of Bill Clinton and of socially (if not necessarily economically) liberal nostrums and undigested left-liberal self-congratulatory pap, one isn't paying attention.

No question, then, that in the cinema we're finally getting a reexamination of our odd and largely nasty record of race relations. We Americans like to feel good about ourselves (all people do), and a well-constructed if not terribly nuanced feel-good movie like "Remember the Titans" triumphs at the box office, even though it lacks the usually necessarily rank language and putrid violence that mass audiences crave. So, too, "Men of Honor" — the title is more generic, though not by much, than the character stereotypes here — will gratifyingly recoup its cost, and then some. It's a nice story about a fine man and it has a happy ending, specifically a more decent treatment of a valiant American by a system that incorporates more shameful episodes of abuse by non-whites than many would care to admit.

Carl Brashear (Cuba Gooding, Jr., recovering admirably from a few lousy roles following his loud-mouth over-praised Oscar-winning performance in "Jerry Maguire") comes from a poor sharecropper family, gets it into his head to become a Navy diver, and against all odds, does so, incurring not only the cruel disdain of his fellows but the active hostility of his Master Chief (Robert De Niro, in another winning performance, as a fictional character).

Since most Americans last week had to be instructed in the peculiarities of our electoral system, no surprise that few alive know anything about the racism of the American military. Ancient history to most young Americans is New Kids on the Block; how could they be expected, given our stupefyingly watered-down school system, to know about true stories like that of Brashear? So, the movie has juicy stuff at its base, but it plays it safe, with a nutty commander (Hal Holbrook), a stuttering simpleton good guy (Michael Rapaport), Brashear's doctor lover (Aunjanue Ellis) and so on, such that the real events that showed what our hero was made of — sturdy, valiant stuff — are entwined with made-up chaff that permits the movie's makers to feel noble. Brashear is a genuine American hero. He deserves a perhaps better film celebration, but this one heads in the right direction.

Red Planet (D)

When Man landed on the moon in 1969 there were those who thought it was all a publicity stunt, the photos beamed back from our barren satellite merely a sleazy trick, all of it happening on a movie set or on remote in Nevada. Fidgeting through "Red Planet," marginally worse than "Mission to Mars," which we endured not long ago, one might have hoped that somehow the payoff would be that this was in fact a put-on of space exploration, that the landing on the inhospitable red planet by our hapless crew of uniformly uncharismatic adventurers was some kind of trick, a "Wag the Dog," a something that would smell cleverly of satire. Seeing more movies than a sane person ought to see leads to that kind of vain hope, a wishful thinking dashed again and again on the cruel shores of actuality.

You can take this to the bank: The technology of the contemporary cinema is such that anything, almost, can be computer-generated; the look of a handsomely funded film need never be cheesy, the whiz-bang gizmos can always be eye-poppingly impressive, a cheery suspension of disbelief about what we're seeing is easily (albeit expensively) doable. And "Red Planet" has its moments: A robot that, programmed to protect itself, takes umbrage at its humans' efforts to dismantle it (for good reasons, from their point of view) and goes on a killing spree — that's nice. And other smidgens of special effects snazziness are on view, though on the whole we're to be satisfied primarily with a lot of gallumphing along a largely reddish landscape, provided courtesy Australia and Jordan. What should be a slam dunk — gloriously overwhelming special effects — is in fact large part a slam dud.

The story? A handful of expeditioners, sent from Earth 50 years hence, since Earth is overpopulated and dying, are to see if algae planted on Mars have done their job and provided a potentially welcoming environment for humankind. But with solar flares disabling their ship, the guys (Val Kilmer, Tom Sizemore, Benjamin Bratt, Simon Baker, Terence Stamp) must go down to the planet's surface, leaving their commander (Carrie-Anne Moss, who, 50 years hence, wears the bosom-enhancing tighty-whities of our era plus one of those doofus caps that are all the rage nowadays) on board to flip switches and do nifty scientific things.

On the surface, they suddenly discover that (get this!) Mars now has oxygen and they can take off their space helmets and more comprehensively bore us with their idiotic dialogue. Two of them die early on, then others, finally leaving the one who'll reunite with the babe — er, commander — and [illegible] prolong this? All the standard ingredients of today's cynical dumbness except amazingly, the "Save the Whale" character who black [illegible] dies early on or is the only surviving person on board), and the [illegible] tors of the Martian dust storms and temperature extremes are [illegible] ignored. Why let a little [illegible] up a dreadful movie?

Written by [illegible] Jonathan Lemkin [illegible] Antony Hoffman. Rated PG-13.

Relocated septic system could jeopardize sale

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

April showers can bring May's flowers, but the flowers ended up missing when Edgar and Doris Callahan attempted to sell their Dover home May 14, 1996. On Nov. 1, 2000, the Massachusetts Appeals Court reviewed the case of Karl Breuing and Heidi Kummer vs. Doris Callahan.

Background

On April 10, 1996, Karl Breuing and Hedi Kummer, the buyers and the plaintiffs, entered into a purchase-and-sale agreement (P&S) to purchase the Dover property of Edgar and Doris Callahan, the sellers and defendants, for a price of $685,000. Heidi and Karl paid a deposit of $68,500, to be held in escrow by the listing broker until the closing date of May 14, 1996.

As the home was serviced by a septic system, Massachusetts law, as set forth in Title V, required that the septic system be inspected and its compliance with minimum standards be determined. The P&S also required the sellers to deliver a Title V compliance certificate for the septic system, at closing.

Anthony Summers

The purchase-and-sale also contained language, which required the sellers to deliver the property at closing "in the same condition as they now are, reasonable use and wear and tear excepted." Further, the P&S contained the standard language that provided that "in the event that the sellers could not deliver the premises in the same condition as they now are... the time for performance hereof shall be extended for a period of 30 or fewer days".

And finally the P&S contained a provision which stated that "if the buyers shall not fulfill the buyers' agreements herein, all deposits made hereunder by the buyers shall be retained by the sellers..."

Apparently, this sale was unfortunately transacted pursuant to Murphy's Law which provides that anything that can go wrong certainly will.

At the time the P&S was signed (April 10) the septic system had not yet been inspected for compliance with Title V. On April 26, 1996, the buyers received notice that the septic system had failed inspection. Clearly, the septic system would never be corrected by the closing date (May 14, 1996).

The sellers quickly designed a new system which the buyers rejected since landscaping would be substantially altered. On May 13, the buyers requested the return of their deposit. In response, the sellers notified the buyers that, as allowed by the P&S, the closing date would be extended 30 days to June 13, 1996. The sellers then installed a new septic system, and on June 13, 1996, they were prepared to deliver the property with a Title V certificate of compliance. The buyers refused to close and demanded the return of their deposit. When the deposit was not returned, the buyers brought suit.

Discussion of law

To determine the rights of the parties we look the P&S agreement and the meaning of various terms and phrases. The agreement required the seller to deliver the property "in the same condition as they now are (April 10)..."

This case will turn on the interpretation of that provision in light of the redesigned and re-located septic system and its effect on the landscaping and use of the property. If the court finds that the redesigned septic system prevented the sellers from delivering the property in substantially the same condition as it was on April 10, the date the agreement was signed, the sellers will fail under the Agreement.

Decision

It is a long-standing legal concept that every piece of real estate is unique and cannot be duplicated. For this reason, a real estate contract is one of the few contracts that will be specifically enforced by the Courts in lieu of a judgment for damages. This case has already traveled from the Superior Court to the Appeals Court, and back down to the Superior Court. It has not yet been finally adjudicated.

The issue the court must resolve is: has the property been changed to the extent that the sellers are not able to deliver the property in the same condition as it was on April 10, the date the contract was signed?

What do you think?

Legal advice

There is a deposit of $68,500 at stake plus significant legal fees. Personally, I think the sellers are out of luck, since the removal of mature trees and the shifting of available open land from one side of the house to the other is a substantial change of the property fromwhat the buyers originally agreed to buy.

I will report the court's final decision in a future article, and until then remember this — there are standard form purchase-and-sale agreements, but unfortunately there are no standard purchase and sales.

Rent vs. own

gested.

If you rent part of the condo for $1,200 a month, said Fisch, "you're way ahead of the game.

"Keep in mind, based on that number, you have to figure where is your cutoff. You have to figure out how much it will cost on a monthly basis to rent versus own.

"In a worst case, if you sold the condo for the same amount of money as you purchased it, you are still way ahead of the game and you would recoup your $56,000."

A 520-square-foot one-bedroom condominium on Gainsborough Street, which includes a bow window, a fireplace, hardwood floors, exposed brick, a modern kitchen and bath, plus a washer/dryer, and an on-site security guard, is listed for sale for $198,000, said Fisch.

With 20 percent down, the buyer could finance $158,400 for 30 years at 8.25 percent and pay $1,189.58 a month. Add to that a $171 monthly condo fee and $1,585 for real estate taxes, and the total would come to $1,492.66 a month. More than half the building is owner-occupied, he added.

This same unit could be rented for between $1,500 and $1,700 a month, he said. "It's the same scenario. By owning, you are building equity into your home."

Tribute to a Cohasset legend

Athletic complex named for Clark Chatterton

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

During the annual Thanksgiving football game, a halftime tribute honored a true Cohasset legend — Clark Chatterton.

Chatterton, who succumbed to cancer in June, served as Cohasset's athletic director for 25 years. He also ran the concession for the non-profit South Shore Music Circus for 39 years. But after the halftime ceremony that frigid Thursday morning, his memory will live on in Cohasset much longer.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund announced that, by gubernatorial proclamation, Nov. 24, 2000, will forever be known in the state of Massachusetts as "Clark Chatterton Day."

The Clark Chatterton Honor Committee — consisting of Jack DeLorenzo, Gary Vanderweil, Linda Shultz, Larry Shultz, Dick Brown, Linda Bolster, Ron Ford and Mike Gill — has spent the last few months starting up the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund, which will support all sports at CHS.

"We thought of doing a scholarship fund," said Cohasset's new Athletic Director Ron Ford. "But we thought he would have wanted the money going into the athletic program."

State Sen. Robert Hedlund announced during the ceremony that the high school athletic facilities, including Alumni Field, Lillard Field, Davis Track, Sullivan Gym and Doer Gym, will be named the "Clark Chatterton Athletic Complex."

"We are totally excited and overwhelmed," said Chatterton's wife, Sallyann Chatterton.

Hedlund also announced that, by gubernatorial proclamation, Nov. 24, 2000, will forever be known in the state of Massachusetts as "Clark Chatterton

Pharmacy plan could be right Rx for seniors

Speaker to explain program Dec. 10

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Elders aching for financial relief when it comes to burdensome prescription drug costs, may have a light at the end of the tunnel.

The state legislature, this past session, passed a pharmaceutical insurance plan, that features a comparatively small monthly premium and co-pay, and is designed to save the state's seniors hundreds and even thousands of dollars annually.

"There is nothing else like this in the whole country," said Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs chairman Joseph Buckley. "It's something that is really needed. [Presidential candidates George W. Bush and Al Gore] wanted to do something to help seniors with prescription drugs and this is something really concrete that's going to start that."

Coming together in annual celebration

Village Fair is Saturday

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It's not officially the holiday season until Cohasset's churches come together for the annual Village Fair. Local shoppers get a chance to avoid the long lines and traffic normally found around the region's malls, and instead look for decorations, gifts and snacks in a stroll about the Common.

Three of the participating Cohasset's churches are within a football throw apart: First Parish (Unitarian Universalist) on the Town Common; Second Congregational on Highland Avenue; and St. Stephen's (Episcopal) on the ledge overlooking Cohasset Village. The Panagia Greek Orthodox Church on Jerusalem Road rents out the Town Hall auditorium for the festival.

"All the little churches get together and do it, so walking from church to church is like walking in an old town," said Angela Lofgren, one of the organizers of the event. "It reminds me of when we were little and would go into Boston, and all

The Kylie family tries to get back on their feet

Editor's note: This is one story in a series during our Gifts of Hope campaign.

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

It could happen to anyone.

Sean and Shelly Kylie never expected that they would be homeless. But circumstances spiraled out of control and forced the South Shore residents to seek help with housing.

Currently, Sean, 24, Shelley, 20, and eight-month-old Michelle are living in an upstairs apartment at the Unitarian Parish House in Cohasset. The family was placed there by the South Shore Friends of the Homeless organization in Weymouth, a group which has been involved in sheltering homeless families for a number of years.

"What happened to us was a complete surprise," Sean said. "It's just crazy. One minute everything was fine. I was making more than enough money at a good job. The next thing I knew, everything was gone. It was like a hard slap in the face."

But what happened to the Kylie family was a matter of chance. It could have happened to anybody.

The Kylies lived at Shelley's mother's house in Braintree up until September when they were suddenly evicted. Shelley explained that after she and Sean were married in December 1999, they moved into her mother's home. Michelle was born in April, but there was no concern about financial means.

Uncommon visitor to World's End in Hingham

Tropical bird sighting is a record for state

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A new feathered friend at World's End in Hingham is causing a stir among birding enthusiasts.

A Tropical King Bird, which is common in Central and South America, is attracting attention from local folk and those from as far away as Maine, Pennsylvania and the western part of the state. It's the first time the bird has been recorded in Massachusetts.

"I knew we had something pretty exciting."
— Sally Avery

"It's the bird that you see sitting on wires in cities and villages and on farms," said David Clapp, director of the South Shore Sanctuary of the Massachusetts Audubon Society in Marshfield. "It's a very common bird but the farthest north it goes is the Rio Grande Valley."

Thanks to Sally Avery of Cohasset, whose sharp eyes spotted the bird on Nov. 9, the sighting was posted on the internet and has led to a parade of "birders" armed with telescopes, walkie-talkies and binoculars to World's End.

"I knew the bird I had come across was not one of the usual birds we see here," said Avery, who has studied birds for many years and lectures on the subject. She explained that she and her husband, Dick Avery, were out birding at World's End that day and were turning around to go home when she spotted the bird perched on a stick on Planter's Hill through her binoculars.

"I knew we had something pretty exciting," she recalled. She then circumnavigated the bird to study it as much as she could. Armed only with an eastern US bird guide, the Averys borrowed the field guide that encompasses the entire country from the ranger shack to determine that it was a Tropical King Bird.

The following day a friend a fellow birder, Helen Harris Cross of Hull, accompanied Avery back to World's End. Cross was able to help

Red Lion Inn joins restaurant game with a roar

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

If competition stirs improvement, South Shore diners are going to be in for a treat.

Hoping to throw his hat into the ring of upscale restaurants on the South Shore, Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide announced the hiring of a new managing partner that is sure to raise eyebrows across the restaurant community.

Anthony Ambrose, the owner/operator of Ambrosia on Huntington, and former executive chef of the Bostonian and Hotel Meridien, and a Cohasset resident for the past four years, has been brought into the fold, as Ordelheide attempts to make the Red Lion Inn the place to go in Cohasset.

"It was never my intention to run [the inn]," said Ordelheide, who is in the final stages of a near $7 million renovation of the property, which includes the adjacent Lilac House. "What I'm doing is concentrating on construction. I've hired [Ambrose], one of the greatest chefs in America, to be my managing partner."

Ordelheide said Ambrose will have complete control over operations at the inn. "He'll be overseeing the property. All personnel will be reporting to him," he said. "Basically he'll be the CEO."

Ordelheide's goal for the Red Lion is simple: "It will be a five-star hotel at some time and have a restaurant second to none."

Anthony Ambrose of Cohasset is the new managing partner at the Red Lion Inn.

For Ambrose, the Red Lion Inn is a chance to show off his skills in his new hometown. In fact, he said the Red Lion was almost sort of a homecoming for him. He had interest in purchasing the inn originally two years ago before Ordelheide purchased the dilapidated inn – a remnant from Cohasset Village life in 1704 – but backed away because of a lack of capital and time to renovate it. Instead, Ambrose said he "watched from the sidelines" as Ordelheide bought, gutted and expanded the nearly 300-year old building. Now the Red Lion Inn has become a "French country chateau, on a coastal city in one of the oldest lobster villages in New England," said Ambrose. "Where I studied [in France] was in a small little lobster village with a 13-room inn."

He said he took one walk through the renovated Red Lion and fell for it immediately, especially its bonnet stove. "The only person that has a better vision than me has been this man [Ordelheide]," he said. "I never would have gotten involved if I had to build it from the ground up. As I walked through it, he showed me his vision, and what he'd like to accomplish is parallel to what I want to do. That's the only way I could get involved.

"He's certainly a welcome addition to the South Shore. It raises the quality of dining down here."
— Ed Kane, restaurateur

"It's the perfect scenario."

Ambrose will continue to oversee Ambrosia's which he opened to much fanfare in 1994. His role at the Red Lion will be very similar to his role at Ambrosia's, where he not only oversees personnel and chefs, but the creation of the menu and recipes.

"We will have a little different food, but we want to focus on old world favorites...large hearty selections with just a little styling and flair," he explained. Ambrose hopes to bring larger cuts of prime rib, greater lobster and crustacean selection, larger pieces of fish grilled bone-in, to the menu, alongside a variety of starches and potatoes, and froi gras dishes. "It will be a traditional coastal menu, with a strong European flair," described Ambrose.

He expects it to take about 90 days to bring in the appropriate staff to begin what he describes as the "polish and fine-tuning" of the property.

The hiring, though just announced this past week, already has local restaurateurs talking.

"This should raise the bar for all restaurants in the area and bring more people to enjoy what we have to offer," said Joe Campbell, the new director of operations at the Atlantica and Kimballs By the Sea, the Red Lion Inn's closest geographical competitor. "I'm not surprised that the Red Lion has chosen to bring in a person of Tony's stature and reputation. Operations the size of Atlantica and Kimballs and the Red Lion require experienced management to recognize their full potential."

Ed Kane, owner of Tosca, Stars of Hingham and Boston, Pasha Bar in Weymouth, and Waterworks on Marina Bay, said Ambrose's arrival in the South Shore will result in nothing but good things. "He's certainly a welcome addition to the South Shore. It raises the quality of dining down here," he said. "It gets more people interested in dining on the South Shore and lends more credibility [to the area]."

The addition, Kane said will force his group to stay on its toes, and strive to improve. "My philosophy is competition is good. Anytime anyone raises the bar, you have to raise yours. It's healthy and good for the consumer, good for business in general."

Kane said Ambrose's cutting edge style, and professionalism help restaurants both in the kitchen and out. "His restaurants are good looking, he's inventive, takes part in a lot of good causes," he said. "He's also outgoing, a real nice speaker.

"He's a real good representative for what we want and how we want the business to be viewed."

Tom Fallon, whose wife Kristie Henriksen operates the Siros restaurant chain, called the hiring "fantastic," although he might be a little biased – Ambrose is his son-in-law.

Nonetheless, Fallon said the hiring would be a "shot in the arm" for local businesses.

"They [fans of the Boston food scene] come down this way more often than you realize," Fallon said. Though the South Shore dining scene is going strong, Fallon still considered the move "something that was needed."

He said Ambrose's popularity is drawn from the whole dining experience. "The food, the presentation, the atmosphere, the service; he really is a professional," he said. "He'll be making the restaurant a famous restaurant in no time.

"He's a class act, he knows what he is doing."

The Red Lion Inn property now features 15 luxury suites with jacuzzis and fireplaces, a barn-style function hall, swimming pool, Jazz club, bakery and bistro.

Corrections department

• A story on Cohasset resident Lincoln Bloomfield in the Nov. 17 edition of the Mariner, had the wrong web address for a program he was worked on. The correct address is http://web.mit.edu/cascon

• Due to a reporting editor, a story in last week's Mariner incorrectly listed Ken Cisneros' position. He is the technology coordinator in the Cohasset School Department. Teacher Lisa Kalapinski oversees the in-class instruction for the 850 students at the Deer Hill and Osgood schools. Also, Deer Hill School Council representative Adrianne McCarthy said the group is not looking for any money to be taken out of the $292,000 supplementary budget to fund the reinstatement of the Osgood School's technology position. (See letters page 6)

• Some information in the story that appeared in the Cohasset Mariner last week about Massachusetts-American Water Company's proposed rate hike warrants clarification.

When President William Clinton signed legislation some time ago allowing states to create zero-interest drinking water revolving funds to help lower the cost of borrowing money for construction projects to improve water quality, the law did not grandfather in completed projects.

A bill co-sponsored by Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) last year called for the creation of a safe drinking water revolving fund based on the federal model and recommended additional language to include completed projects such as Massachusetts-American Water Company.

The legislation eventually passed, providing $10 million over 10 years to MAWC customers.

The first installment was $2.5 million, which amounted to rate relief of about $190 on average per MAWC customer during the first year of the program.

Children bring their mother a Thanksgiving surprise

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HEARTWARMING STORY

Hello Cohasset! I hope that everyone had a wonderful Thanksgiving and were all able to enjoy family, friends and some time spent together. I wanted to start the column this week with a heartwarming experience and story within our family that is so special to me I feel the need to share it with all of you.

Bonny Farrell, a former Cohasset resident and very special friend to myself and my family is dealing with cancer and is in the midst of some chemo treatments.

Bonnie's daughters, Heather (Pietrowski) Lindquist and Keri (Pietrowski) Piepenbrink and her son, Jeff Pietrowski were all in on a special Thanksgiving Day surprise that to me, was one of the most thoughtful and loving gifts that could be given.

Well, before I give it away, let me set the scene. It is Tuesday, two days before Thanksgiving and Bonnie is home by herself resting. She hears a knock on the door and goes to answer, but no one is there. Or, so she thought. Looking down on the step, she sees this baby in a car seat. Talk about confusion, did someone leave me a baby, did the mom go the car to get something or what? As she stood there trying to figure out what to do, she noticed a piece of paper in the car seat. She took the paper and started to read. "Hi Bubbie," said the note. "I am Olivia, your granddaughter and have come to give you some lovin'!" You see, Olivia lives with her dad, (Jeff) and mom in Michigan! As this wonderful scene was unfolding, Jeff, Keri, Heather and Keri's two children Kati and Kyle were watching from the car. What an unbelievable gift that this was, from Olivia's mom and big brother Kaiden,(who turned 6 on Thanksgiving Day. Happy Birthday, big guy) to Jeff who brought Olivia here to everyone else who was in on this surprise! As I write this, I am crying again with tears of happiness that Bonnie had such a bundle to love, cuddle and hold as she recoups from this round of chemo!

THAYER ATHLETE

Now, I received a great letter from Maureen Smith, letting me know about her wonderful daughter and her accomplishments. Congratulations are in order for Lauren Smith and the Thayer Academy field hockey team.

Lauren, a senior and co-captain of the Varsity Team helped lead Thayer to their first N.E.P.S.A.C. Class B Division Championship. Thayer finished the season with a 13-4-1 record, placing the team in the semi-finals where they won against Williston NorthHampton, 2-1 and in the final round against St. George's School, also 2-1. Great Job Lauren!

WILLIAMS TOP SCORER

Another Cohasset resident, Stefanie Noering, who is a sophomore at Williams College, ended her second varsity field hockey season as the top scorer on the team. She started in every game and earned Williams Athlete of the Week after her four-goal score against Smith College. The team, with a regular season record of 14-2, made the NCAA Division II quarterfinals and won runner up in the first ever NE small College Athletic Conference Field Hockey Championship. With 29 points, 12 goals and 5 assists, she also earned first team honors from the NE Small College Athletic Conference and the National Field Hockey Coaches Association named her to the All Region New England Team.

Congratulations to you, Stefanie. Stefanie is the daughter of Richard and Sabina Noering of Lantern Lane who are both very proud of your accomplishments!

SPECIAL ENGAGEMENT

Some great news from some people that we all know quite well. Bill and Jeanne McAuliffe, along with Sallyann Chatterton announce the engagement of their children, Jennifer McCaulliffe and Troy Chatterton. We are sure that Clark and Mimi Chatterton, Troy's late dad and grandmother, and Shirley Laidlaw, Jen's late grandmother are smiling down on this special couple with their blessings and love. Congratulations to both of you on this wonderful news!

THANKS, PETER

A wonderful celebration was held last weekend in honor of Peter Laugelle and his recent retirement. The party was held at the Legion here in Cohasset and a great time was had by all in attendance. Peter appeared to be quite surprised and thoroughly enjoyed the evening. Peter worked for the Town of Cohasset's Tree and Park Dept. for 30-plus years and will be missed by all. We all know that he will be on hand to answer any questions that will arise and help when needed. Please make sure to give him your best when you see him Around Town. Many thank you's go out to all who helped plan and work this party, especially to the many friends of Peter's at the Legion and his friends at the DPW.

FLEET OF VOLUNTEERS

Cohasset resident Chris Woodward, right, does her part at the Boston Food Pantry along with other Fleet employees who donated their time helping to sort food that was delivered to soup kitchens, daycare centers, homeless shelters, residential shelters, rehabilitation centers and food pantries.

VILLAGE FAIR

Just a reminder to everyone who is planning their weekend plans. The Annual Village Fair is this Saturday, Dec. 2 from 10 a.m..-2 p.m. This fair is the combination of four churches and offers fresh trees and wreaths, clam chowder, Greek Pastries and a Swedish coffee shop, holiday centerpieces, crafts, books and jumble sale, a children's secret room and pictures with the guy in the big red suit! It is always a wonderful start to the holiday season and is great fun for everyone involved.

Speaking of the fair, the Rusty Skippers will be playing some holiday music for us. If any of you went to the Tree Lighting this past weekend, you were able to hear this talented group. Under the direction of Mr. Steve Biagini, this group offers a wonderful selection of music that is fun and festive for all. They would like to thank Steve for his hard work and dedication to this group. Come on down, have a cup of hot chocolate and listen to some great music.

SANTA FANS

Just a note to all Santa fans, He is coming to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sunday, Dec. 17 at 3 p.m. for all children and adults who would like to visit with him. Santa accompanied by his "Elf who wouldn't wear tights," will entertain the children with holiday stories and lore. There will be a departing treat for all good boys and girls. Join us for this holiday visit.

That's it for this week. Enjoy the week, maybe some snow will start to fall and we can all get ready for the fun month of December! Remember to get all your news to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, 923-1057 or 622 CJC Highway.

Cohasset High School student tests harbor salinity

Sees if sewer out-fall pipe has impact

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

With as much as 75,000 gallons of freshwater flowing into Cohasset Harbor a day from the new sewer out-fall pipe — and the day when that number increases to 300,000 gallons looming — many who depend on the saltwater for their livelihood are worried.

The Central Cohasset sewer project has finished work and more than 800 homes will soon hook up, dumping massive amounts of treated, fresh water into the harbor. Town fishermen, particularly lobstermen, have expressed concern that lobsters stored in "lobster cars" – underwater compartments used to hold their catch until it's sold – will become sick or die from a low salinity levels in the harbor.

As a result this past summer, the Board of Health began studying salinity and dissolved oxygen levels in the harbor, led by Cohasset Middle/High School student Charlie Anderson.

The result? More studies are needed.

But for right now, Anderson and the Board of Health agree that salinity levels in the water are plenty high enough to maintain lobster life, even after a 2-inch-per-hour rainstorm washes down James Brook.

"We possibly need more testing," Anderson said. "But what it seemed to determine was that it was within the range suitable for marine life."

Charlie Anderson at the Cohasset Water Treatment Plant demonstrates the dissolved oxygen meter.

The dory used in the study was built by high school students under Jack Buckley's instruction. Gear in the boat is the grab probe developed by the Board of Health to obtain samples; the dissolved oxygen meter; the salinometer (not visible) and the oars.

Anderson did the tests as a summer intern for the Board of Health — a position he obtained through his involvement with the Summer Institute, a summer educational program focusing on the environment.

Six times in July and August Anderson paddled out in a boat belonging to the Cohasset Maritime Institute and took measurements at six different locations around the harbor: by the Cohasset Sailing Club, Kimballs Hotel, the Middle Lobster Car, Peter Roy's dock off Margin Street, the Cohasset Yacht Club dock, and the Atlantica dock. He took measurements from the surface, five feet and 10 feet.

The water samples were then analyzed for salinity by a "refractometer salinometer" – which measures how much water refracts. Saltier water refracts light at a higher rate. Water was also tested for dissolved oxygen with a meter borrowed from the sewer commission.

According to a report Anderson wrote for the Board of Health, "the only place there's a problem is at the sewer outflow pipes," but added it wasn't a serious problem because the ebb and flow of the tides flushes out the area every six hours. Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo said in a letter to Coastal Zone Management that "lobster cars…never experienced salinity levels which fell below 28 parts per thousand in all of the sampling."

Anderson and Bobo both felt rainfall was more of a danger to harbor salinity levels than the outfall pipe. "A lot of fresh water comes out of the gulf," said Bobo. "We were also surprised by how much came out of James Brook."

"Lower salinity levels are more the result of rainfall than the out-fall pipe," added Anderson.

Godzik said despite the thumbs-up to the current situation, testing will have to continue to see what happens when the treatment plant gets going full speed.

The harbor testing is the beginning stage of a volunteer effort being organized by Bobo to continuously test the harbor and Little Harbor for salinity levels and coliform levels, in accordance with the state Fresh Water Act. "The Department of Environmental Protection looks in favor at the whole program," he said. "If they approve [the testing plan run by volunteers] that puts us along way towards getting away from violations."

The town was found in non-compliance with clean-water laws nearly 20 years ago. The recent sewer pipe installation projects have been part of the required court-ordered clean-up of Cohasset's watershed area.

Bobo said a volunteer effort would also save the town thousands of dollars in testing fees.

Anderson's participation in the internship with the Board of Health stemmed from his involvement with the Summer Institute. "We have been increasingly looking for some more ways to get students involved with community projects and do field work," said middle/high school teacher Jack Buckley, who is one of the main instructors of the Summer Institute. "It's an opportunity on how academic concepts they are studying applies to the real world." Anderson took some classes with the institute last summer, the program's first year in existence, and agreed to simultaneously do an internship with the board.

"I enjoy science. I thought it would be better than getting a regular job at a pizza place," Anderson, 16, said. "I had fun doing it, fun doing the experiments."

IT'S HAPPENING

Santa Claus

You better watch out because Santa Claus is coming to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Sunday, Dec. 17 at 3 p.m. for all children or adults who would like to visit with him.

Hedlund victory party is Dec. 3

The Friends of Hedlund will hold "Victory 2000: A Salute to State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund" on Sunday, Dec. 3, from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham.

Suggested donations for the event are $35 per person and include a celebratory brunch. Tickets may be obtained by calling Polly Logan at (781) 383-0031.

As state senator from the Plymouth-Norfolk District, Hedlund represents a diverse constituency in parts of Braintree as well as Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate and Weymouth.

In addition to Logan, Victory 2000 Cohasset co-chairs include Janet Fogarty, Ted and Julie Guild, Hon. William Weeks and Rob Spofford. Joining the Friends of Senator Hedlund will be special invited state, county and local officials, including GOP Senate Leader Brian Lees, GOP House Leader Fran Marini, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, Sheriff Charles Decas and County Commissioner Robert Stone.

Illustrator to sign

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will host illustrator Karen A. Jerome on Saturday Dec. 2 from 2 – 4pm. "When It Rained Cats and Dogs" is a children's book based on a poem written by Nancy Byrd Turner in 1946. The poem tells the story of a day when it literally rained cats and dogs, each falling harmlessly into the arms of a child. The book features original full-color illustrations by Karen Jerome that realistically capture a variety of breeds while at the same time imparting a cheerful sense of fun. Jerome, a professional illustrator with a studio in the Boston area, will demonstrate the art of children's book illustration as well as to sign copies of the book. This book is the first title for Meadow Geese Press, which is located in Marshfield Hills. Free. Please call (781) 383-2665 for more information or to order your signed copy.

A season for giving

Most of us can't fathom the idea of being without the comfort zone of our houses. A place where we seek refuge from the crazy, hectic pace of the world. A place to call home.

But this holiday season more people than ever are finding themselves out on the street or staying in shelters.

Sean and Kelly never imagined it could happen to them. Things were looking up on the job front, they had a newborn baby who brought such joy to their lives and were settling in at Kelly's mother's apartment. But then her mother became ill and suddenly things spiraled out of control. Before they knew it, they were evicted and looking for an affordable place to live. Not an easy task on the South Shore in this thriving economy with housing prices going through the roof.

Theirs is not an unusual story right now. In a series we did earlier this fall we told of countless examples of people struggling to find affordable housing and the difficult choices they had to make.

As we enter this holiday season — a time of hope and light — we continue to hear heart-wrenching stories about the troubles facing so many South Shore residents. In talking to homeless advocates as part of our Gifts of Hope campaign geared to calling attention to the plight of so many, we are told of the growing problem of homelessness in our area.

Nearly every shelter serving the South Shore, from Quincy to Plymouth, is at full capacity every night. It is the first time in the history of Fr. Bill's Place in Quincy that the shelter has been overbooked every night for the last 12 months. We're told that people from this area are being forced to go to shelters as far away as Western Massachusetts because there is no room locally.

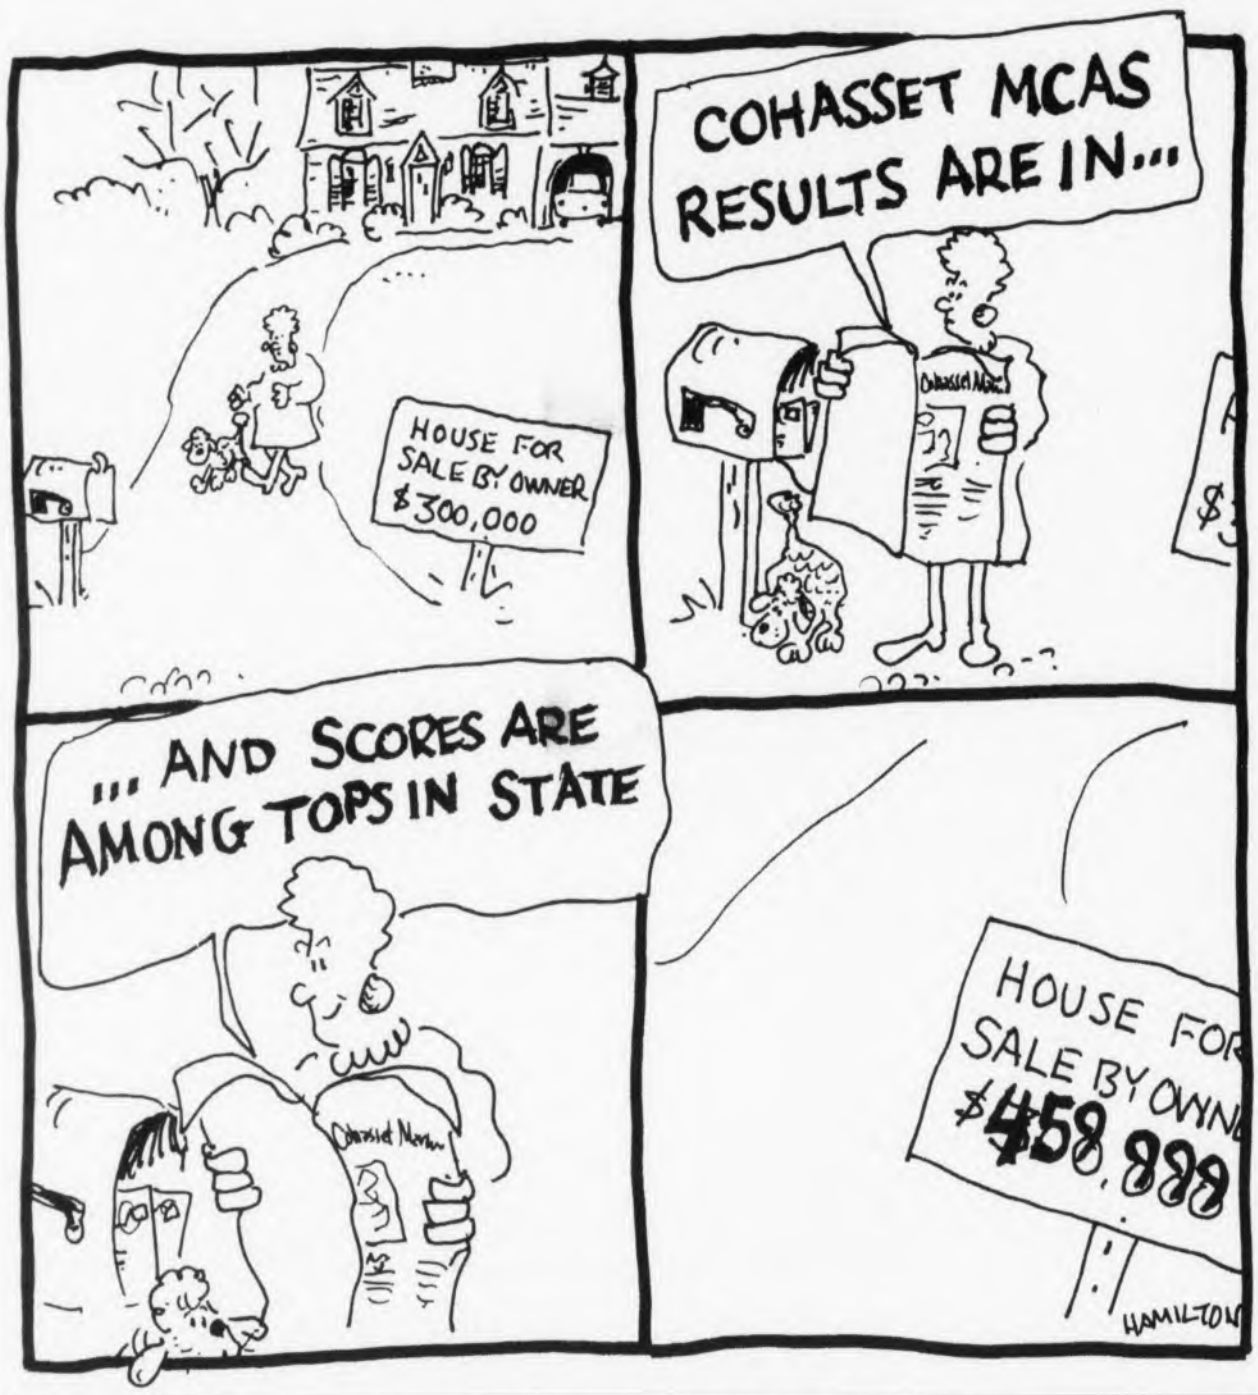
The high cost of rentals, spurred by the robust economy, and lack of funding for state programs forcing people off welfare and out of state programs are said to be the leading causes of the dramatic increase in homeless individuals and families. Talk to the advocates and providers and they'll tell you the situation has reached epic proportions. And some alarming statistics support their claims.

"It's scary. I'd say it has reached new heights," notes one provider on the South Shore. "We are in dire need of finding solutions."

Helping with those solutions is what Community Newspaper Company's Gifts of Hope campaign is all about. In some small way, we are hoping to call attention to this problem that could be hurting our friends, family and neighbors. This is the second year of our campaign to help ease the burden; last year's effort raised nearly $5,000 to benefit three organizations — Fr. Bill's Place, Carolina Hill in Marshfield and the South Shore Friends of the Homeless. Each week through Christmas we will be writing stories and asking our readers to contribute whatever they can to help assist the organizations in their very worthwhile endeavors.

All three of the charities selected are grassroots organizations whose efforts are felt and seen right here on the South Shore, whether it's assisting an individual or an entire family. Through our stories we hope you will see just how valuable their work is and how you can play a vital role in the effort.

To donate to the Gifts of Hope campaign, send your tax-deductible check, made out to one of the three charities noted above, and send to Anne Rodwell, CNC, 165 Enterprise Drive, Marshfield, MA, 02050. We will be running a list of donors in the newspaper so please indicate on a note if you wish to remain anonymous.



Remembering Cheryl Bergeron

In October, I had the chance to meet and interview Cheryl Bergeron as part of a series of stories on breast cancer.

Cheryl was one of the strongest people I have ever talked with, as she smiled defiantly in the face of the breast cancer which was taking over her whole body.

"This is definitely a full-time job," Cheryl told me at the time, referring to her battle against cancer. "Twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. Even in my sleep I'm dreaming good thoughts — thoughts of being healthy."

Unfortunately, I discovered on Monday that Cheryl died during the course of last weekend.

I'll always admire Cheryl for the kind of person she was. No, I did not know her very long. I only chatted with her for a couple of hours. But within that time frame, I was in awe of her optimistic outlook on her life. It seemed to me that she was the type of person who took life for what it was — a short and unpredictable ride.

Now Cheryl is at peace, as her long battle against cancer is over. And hopefully, she is still dreaming those good thoughts that she told me about.

My heart goes out to Cheryl's family, friends, and other loved ones. She was one of the most inspiring people I've ever had a chance to meet. We're all grateful for her courage in sharing her story during National Breast Cancer Awareness month.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Heartfelt thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

I want to express my sincere appreciation and offer my heartfelt "thanks" to all of the voters in Cohasset who placed their confidence and trust in me by reelecting me as their state senator and returning me to the Massachusetts Senate to represent them.

I also would like to thank the Cohasset Mariner for the thorough and professional coverage of the many local races for elective office.

During the recent campaign season I met so many great people at coffee hours, town functions and numerous other events. I found myself energized by their enthusiasm and support.

In addition to my supporters I would also like to thank all who participated in the process, whether on my behalf or other candidates. It is only with an active, informed citizenry that we can truly have state government work to benefit all citizens.

Technology position

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is in response to the article written by Rick Collins regarding the School Committee's "revisiting of the Osgood technology position." There were a number of inaccuracies in the article and we are writing this letter to clarify the intent of our efforts.

We were not at the Nov. 16 School Committee meeting to ask that the Osgood Technology position be funded out of the 2000/2001 school budget or out of the $292,000 supplementary budget approved at the Oct. 23 Town Meeting. Nor were we there to suggest that we would raise the funds for this teaching position. We were there to request that the School Committee use a portion of the $50,000 that they received from the State to reinstate this position from Jan. 1 to June 1. The use of $12,000-$15,000 to fund this position will benefit 850 students at Osgood and Deer Hill and represents 65 percent of our total school population! It is clear that the current shared teaching arrangement is not meeting the educational needs of our students; some of whom have only had a technology instruction 3 or 4 times since September.

We became aware of the School Committee's proposed purchase of an extra curricular 15 person van, which is supposed to bring savings to our transportation budget. The school needs $12,000 to complete the purchase of this van. The School Committee has proposed that this money be taken from the $50,000 additional monies received from the State. We believe that the technology position should be a greater priority at this time. However, we believe that the van could be purchased through the use of outside funding/donations; whereas the funding for the technology position is not "fund-raisable!"

We proposed that the School Committee commit to funding the technology position as of Jan. 1 and that they look to outside funding/donations to fund the balance due for the van. This suggestion will simultaneously allow us to meet our educational needs and to achieve the cost savings to our transportation budget.

We would like to bring closure to the technology dilemma at Osgood and Deer Hill. At the Dec. 7 School Committee meeting we will ask the members to give us their commitment to adopt this proposal.

Our village

TO THE EDITOR:

Residents:

We have attended meetings regarding the revitalization of Cohasset. We have heard discussions about the revitalization of the Village. We're told that the Village and the harbor need to be connected so that tourists and visitors can find their way around from place to place in our village/town. We're told that our sidewalks, streets and intersections need to be redone, that our parks need to be renovated, that our overhead wires should be buried, all these plus many more improvements to be done so the tourists and visitors will feel welcome.

Is this what the tourists want? We think they'd like to see Cohasset as Cohasset, an ex-shipbuilding port, an ex-port of call for schooners carrying lumber and freight of various sorts, and currently a very active fishing and lobstering port. Yes we think they'd like to see Cohasset as it is — a small, active, livable, bustling quaint New England town.

We have a lot to offer the tourist/visitor who chooses to stop along their way off the beaten path. We have a carillon that is world famous. We have a long history that includes Captain John Smith and his discovery of Cohasset. We have, off our shore, Minot's Ledge Light, a lighthouse known as "the most dangerous lighthouse in the United States." And along with this we have the history of its construction which is fascinating. We have historical churches, the First Parish that goes back to the break between Cohasset and Hingham, the Episcopal Church noted for its history, beauty and the carillon. And other churches with their own contribution to the town's history. We have our maritime museums, our "Captains Walk" which takes the tourist/visitor from the Village to and around the harbor. This walk, ably handled by the town's curator, delves into 10 different historic landmarks around the harbor. And there's more, lots more.

So let's exert our efforts to promoting what we have and through our own board of selectmen, town manager, DPW and other boards make improvements, cosmetic or other, needed to spruce up Cohasset as we choose. We don't need an outside source to tell us what we should do. We've lived here and know the town. Please write your board of selectmen.

HEALTH NOTES

Diabetes is on the rise

As National Diabetes Awareness Month closes, we are reminded that an estimated 15.7 million people in the United States have diabetes. During 1990-1998 the number of diagnosed cased increased 33 percent.

Since we are approaching the flu season, all people with diabetes should receive their annual influenza vaccination, and if they have never had a pneumococcal vaccination, this too should be included. People with diabetes are more likely to die of complications from flu or pneumonia than people without diabetes. The Board of Health in conjunction with the Social Service League offers free flu and pneumococcal pneumonia vaccinations.

Type 2 diabetes in children and adolescents seems to be a growing problem among all segments of the population. In the past, diabetes in children was generally assumed to be type 1. However, in 2000, the American Diabetes Association estimates 8-45 percent of new cases in children are type 2. Type 1 diabetes is suspected to follow exposure to an "environmental trigger," such as an unidentified virus, stimulating an immune attack against the beta cells of the pancreas (that produce insulin) in some genetically predisposed people. Type 2 diabetes appears to be associated with obesity.

Persons with diabetes should receive the following preventive care practices:

- Dilated Eye Exam every year
- Foot Examinations every year
- Self – Monitoring of Blood Glucose at last once a day
- Glycosylated hemoglobin (Hemoglobin A1C) measurement at least once a year.

Health Notes is provided by the Cohasset Board of Health.

Chads challenge one's vocabulary

You guys may have learned all that good stuff about the Electoral College and absentee ballots and punch card voting this past couple of weeks, but I did something better. I learned a new word.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It's "chad."

I've always thought I was pretty good with words, except when it came to spelling "Yastrzemski."

I may be one of the few people east of the Neponset who can accurately define the word "swyving." Me and Germaine Greer, the Australian feminist who taught it to me.

No, I'm not going to define it for you, this being a family newspaper and all that.

But I digress . . .

I've always thought of a "chad" as having something to do with the Patriots defensive line or medicine as practiced on TV.

Now I learn it's really that little piece of cardboard that pops out when you punch a hole in a ticket on the Greenbush Line in Hingham or a Presidential election ballot in West Palm Beach, Fla., whichever comes first.

I haven't felt so enlightened since the time I learned that those little things on the ends of shoelaces are called "aglets."

Or that LASER stands for "Light Amplification by Simulated Emission of Radiation."

Neither discovery has done me any good, I may point out.

But again I digress . . .

Little did we know that all the time we were describing those dents in the Weymouth ballots as "dents in the Weymouth ballots" during the Delahunt-Johnston congressional contretemps a few years ago, we were really dealing with "pregnant chads."

Had I known at the time, I might have landed a Pulitzer for colorful writing. They look for that, you know.

In case it ever comes up again, there are five types of "chads."

Now I learn it's really that little piece of cardboard that pops out when you punch a hole in a ticket on the Greenbush Line in Hingham or a Presidential election ballot in West Palm Beach, Fla., whichever comes first.

There is a "dimpled chad" (one that is bulging but not penetrated), a "pregnant chad" (attached by all four corners but penetrated, if you'll pardon the expression), a "hanging chad" (attached by a single corner), a "swinging-door chad" (attached by two corners), and a "tri chad" (attached by three corners).

Merriam-Webster's Tenth Edition says the origin of "chad" is unknown.

But the New York Times takes a swing at it, saying "it stems from the Scottish word for gravel or riverbed stones."

Personally, I don't see the connection, but nothing the Scots do or say surprises me. Not when they think of bagpipes as music and haggis as a culinary delicacy.

Actually, the simple (?) act of counting (and recounting and recounting and recounting, ad nauseam) the ballots in Palm Beach County has done wonders for my vocabulary, which seems to be more limited than I thought.

For instance, I never heard of a "butterfly ballot" until County Elections Supervisor Teresa LePore came up with the prototype, apparently to confuse the old folks in "God's Waiting Room," as south Florida has come to be known.

It is described as "a two-option configuration that is confusing to some voters," like those who thought you push Pat Buchanan's button to vote for Algore.

Conservatory wins grant

South Shore Conservatory has been awarded $27,000 Organizational Support Grant by the Massachusetts Cultural Council, a state agency, that promotes excellence, education, access and diversity in the arts and humanities. This is a 54-percent increase over last year's Cultural Council Grant to South Shore Conservatory, with SSC ranking 12th out of 45 applicants in a category that includes community music schools, educational organizations and others. The grant is the largest awarded in this category to a South Shore applicant this fiscal year.

South Shore Conservatory Director James Simpson said the grant is significant for the level of support it provides to SSC programs, but equally important because it clearly indicates the conservatory is doing an excellent job meeting its mission of providing access to quality education in the arts.

"Our vision is essentially identical to the cultural council's stated goals of excellence, education, access and diversity," Simpson explains. "We are well known as the source on the South Shore for excellent instructors, and we are committed to strengthening this foundation by building a core faculty of outstanding professionals who teach full time at the conservatory. We serve 2,600 students of all ages, abilities and interests, from 35 communities on the South Shore."

Simpson adds that many people on the South Shore are not aware that the conservatory with campuses in Duxbury and Hingham is the largest music school in Southeastern Massachusetts and one of the largest suburban-based community arts schools in the country.

MCC Organizational Support grants, which must be matched at least 1:1 with private dollars, are awarded through a competitive process and peer review.

COHASSET CARES

Return to earth

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Yes, I've been away from the column for a while, but not that far away, intensifying my environmental education in a number of ways. I hope any reader of the paper concerned about the environment read Jim Shipsky's article of about a month ago entitled "Taking responsibility for the Earth." Thanks to Jim's taking responsibility, the Northwest Earth Institute instituted a most provocative nine-week course in Cohasset called Deep Ecology, which is one of the ways I've been learning a good deal about the truly fantastic and all-important vessel that is carrying us.

First a background note. I've been a bit surprised to learn some people actually do read this column. That's a niggling concern for a columnist — is anyone out there, or am I just writing to clarify my own thoughts? However garbled this column might appear from time to time, I want readers to know my main concern is the Earth. The longer I live, the more important it becomes to me.

Are you finding this true also — the ever-increasing importance of ecology — as time goes by for you? Whether coincidental or not, this heightened awareness for a number of people I know has been occurring around the holiday period, with prominence given to Thanksgiving, which in my opinion and in the opinion of many, occurs daily. I believe it's just a matter of habit. If you agree that we couldn't exist without the sun, air, water, and the other natural things, in that order of priority, then it easily becomes a habit to be grateful for these phenomena as they affect us, like every moment.

Ever thought about how long you would have lived without the sun? I believe doctors say we can live for about four minutes without air before the brain dies from lack of oxygen. We can live from a few days to about a week without any water at all, depending on the climate. The other natural things like the earth, plants, and trees? How necessary are they? I grew up with the saying "Do you live to eat or eat to live?"

I don't know if the following is copyrighted or if I'll get in trouble for using it here, but I don't know the source, except that my stepdaughter, who is a social worker, read this at our table before the Thanksgiving meal:

The following is something to ponder:

• If you woke up this morning with more health than illness ... you are more blessed than the million who will not survive this week.

• If you have never experienced the danger of battle, the loneliness of imprisonment, the agony of torture, or the pangs of starvation ... you are ahead of 500 million people in the world.

• If you can attend a church meeting without fear of harassment, arrest, torture, or death ... you are more blessed than three billion people in the world.

• If you have food in the refrigerator, clothes on your back, a roof overhead and a place to sleep ... you are richer than 75 percent of this world.

• If you have money in the bank, in your wallet and spare change in a dish Somep1ace ... you are among the top of the world's wealthy.

• If you can hold someone's hand, hug them or even touch them on the shoulder ... you are blessed because you can offer God's healing touch.

• If you hold up your head with a smile on your face and are truly thankful ... you are blessed because the majority can, but most do not.

See you next time.

School committee: MCAS scores good, improvement possible

By Rick Collins

One thing pundits say about people like Larry Bird, Michael Jordan or Tiger Woods is that, despite how good they are or were, they always strove to be better.

Add the Cohasset School Department to that list.

With the recent release of the 2000 MCAS scores, Cohasset once again flexed its academic muscles with a strong showing, coming in ninth overall in the state.

Though Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey and school committee members Pat Martin, Mark DeGiacomo and Rick Flynn raved about how well Cohasset did, they were quick to add that improvement is always possible.

"I'm thrilled with the results. They demonstrate, once again, that the Cohasset school district is providing a superb education for our children," said DeGiacomo. "But we want to continue to work to maintain this level of accomplishment and improve upon it."

"The higher grades continue to do well," said first year committee member Flynn. "But we don't want to get too complacent. You can always do better."

Malvey said he was "very, very happy" with the scores and added that the district would be looking at areas to establish extra-help sessions for students having trouble.

The test, which was taken last spring by Cohasset's fourth, eighth and 10th graders, was established as part of the 1993 Education Reform Act to help school districts align their curriculums with state education guidelines. The test remains controversial because of a requirement that the graduating high school class of 2003 must have passed the MCAS test to receive a diploma. At last month's meeting of the Massachusetts Association of School Committees, the group said it would lobby the state legislature to drop the linkage requirement for the time being.

But for the most part, Cohasset students have nothing to worry about. Though the town's 10th graders didn't repeat their chart topping performance of last year, they did come in fourth in the statewide cumulative average, definitely nothing to sneeze at.

"The 10th grade scored very well," said Malvey. "We look at it as a cumulative effect, not just something that happened in the 10th grade."

Cohasset 10th graders' English scores ranked first in the state, followed by scores that were sixth in math and 18th in science and technology.

The eighth grade also did well, placing fourth in math, 24th in English, 36th in science and technology, and 22nd overall. However, the fourth grade's scores remained an area of concern for school committee members. Fourth graders placed 42nd in English, 59th in math, 84th in science and technology, and 63rd overall. Though the results still put them in the higher echelon of schools in the state, the numbers do lag behind their older counterparts.

"I think while the 10th grade scores are obviously outstanding, we do need to continue to work, especially at the fourth grade level to bring those scores up," said DeGiacomo.

Flynn and Martin both tried to put a positive spin on the fourth grade scores. Flynn pointed out the scores were actually better than last year's. "It's clearly an improvement. Scores are on the way up, which is the constructive part," Flynn said. "If they went backward we would be in trouble."

> "There is a constant trend here in Cohasset of students doing exceptionally well, and that's a credit to the students, the community and the faculty."
> — Dr. Edward Malvey, superintendent of schools

School Committee chairman Martin said though the lower numbers "warrant looking into," she tended to think the ever-changing state guidelines have simply prevented the Deer Hill School from fully aligning its curriculum.

"My gut feeling is that it's indicative of problems plaguing districts statewide, the changing curriculums," she said. "The third grade purchased text books for Ancient Greece [in accordance with state guidelines] and then were told in the late summer that it now wasn't part of the testing, now it's American Civilizations.

"It's that kind of jerking back and forth that has hurt us on the tests."

Martin said the unstable atmosphere surrounding state guidelines was one of the reasons the conference took up the debate on the MCAS graduation requirement. "The main feeling is they don't want to get rid of it, but that the state has not allowed the dust to settle, so to speak.

"The state has to finalize it [state guidelines], say 'OK, that's it,' and give towns time to settle."

Malvey said he is still currently analyzing the numbers with Deer Hill School Principal Paul Callahan and Middle/High School Principal Dr. Michael Jones. But overall he thought, "there is a constant trend here in Cohasset of students doing exceptionally well, and that's a credit to the students, the community and the faculty."

For DeGiacomo, he sees MCAS as a way for Cohasset to compare itself to other districts, as well as to itself. "There was some slight slippage in a couple of areas, but we're obviously performing at the highest levels in the state," he said. "We have reason to be proud of everybody."

Martin said the MCAS results will probably be discussed at the Dec. 7 school committee meeting, but not in extensive detail. "We're more versed [in MCAS] than the average person off the street, as we've been talking about it for several years," she said. "But we'll probably talk about it to keep it in people's minds how they did."

A home for the holidays

Sean had a good job at BJ's Wholesale in Weymouth.

To make matters even better, a new tempting job offer in Braintree came through for Sean. It offered better money, more flexible hours, solid benefits, and even a "union environment."

But things suddenly took a turn for the worse. Shelley's mother contracted an illness and was not paying the rent for the place where they all lived. Besides that, Shelley said the landlord who owned their building was upset that so many people were living there.

"When the first eviction notice came, I had no idea about it because my mom didn't say anything about it," Shelley said. "I got the second notice, though. We were out of there in September. Sean didn't have the money to pay it, my mother was sick, and I stopped working when Michelle was born. It was just a bad situation."

But things got even worse. Because Sean had left work early three or four times to go help take care of Shelley's mother, he was fired.

"I left (BJ's) for the new job because it seemed like a more secure situation," Sean said. "But in the end, I guess it wasn't."

Sean, Shelley, and Michelle suddenly found themselves alone with no place to go. Shelley's mother was sent to the hospital for a number of months, and neither Shelley nor Sean knew of anyone in either of their families who could assist them.

They went to the Office of Transitional Assistance in Quincy and asked what they should do. The office referred them to the South Shore Friends of the Homeless organization, which placed them in an apartment almost immediately. They are the lucky ones, according to homeless advocates on the South Shore. So many people are forced to sleep in overcrowded shelters or on the streets.

But with the help of Fr. Bill's Place in Quincy, Carolina Hill in Marshfield and the South Shore Friends of the Homeless people are finding some relief. Homeless advocates are contending with some of the worst conditions they have seen, even in this still robust economy on the South Shore.

Shelley knows they are lucky for the time being.

"It's beautiful here," Shelley said. "And we're the only family living here. I couldn't believe they got us a place so fast, but we have a small child, so that might've had something to do with it. But they were so good to us, and we're grateful for that."

Sean said he is searching for new apartments, but he said all he is finding on the South Shore are places where the rents are out of financial reach for him.

"We're required to keep looking for an apartment," Sean said. "We're not allowed to turn down more than three apartment offers, and if we do, we have to have good reason." He added that is one of the rules set forth by the Friends of the Homeless organization.

With an eight-month old baby, a struggling young couple are battling to find a permanent home on the South Shore this holiday season.

But besides going through what can sometimes be an aggravating home-search, the Kylie family will be warm and safe for the holidays. Sean is working at Stop & Shop in Cohasset, so he said the family has enough money to take care of Michelle, and to give their baby her first Christmas. Shelley said they find kind donations from the public on a frequent basis—mostly baby clothes for Michelle.

Although things are better for the Kylies than they were in September, Sean said he has so many aspirations that he wants to eventually fulfill.

"Eventually, I want to go get my bachelor's degree," Sean said. "Right now, I have my CET (certified electronic technician) certificate, but that's not enough to get hired at a good company. But it's going to take money to get back to college. I can't exactly stop working either, so it's kind of like I'm stuck. I feel like I have the education to get a really good job."

Sean said it's tough being able to afford going back to school, but it's even tougher to afford the price of rent on the South Shore.

"It's very hard to find an affordable apartment here," Shelley said. "We've looked as far as Fall River, Taunton, and even farther. A lot of people in our situation are probably finding that there's nothing in this area. We're lucky we got into this place because a lot of people are being placed into shelters as far as Springfield. We've even heard that some people are being put in motels. We're lucky."

Sean and Shelley said their present goal is to be out on their own with a new place sometime at the beginning of the new year. But they cannot be sure that will actually happen.

"This whole thing is so frightening," Sean said. "If it was just me and Shelley, than that would be one thing. But we have a baby, and that's a whole different ball game. Now, it's kind of like we're getting used to the situation, but when this whole thing first happened, we were terrified. I was also very angry in the beginning. I just never thought anything like this would ever happen."

Sean said he strongly believes the state needs to find a way to lower rents and build more affordable housing units around Massachusetts. He said although he and Shelley are not happy with the fact they are homeless, they still are comfortable with who they are.

"When you're homeless, a lot of people think you're low class or just trash," Sean said. "People sometimes think of some guy just pushing around a carriage full of cans. That's just not the case. Anyone can become homeless, and nobody can understand that unless they've gone through it. People don't have to be so stereotypical about homeless people, because most of those stereotypes are absolutely wrong anyway."

"I think this whole situation has brought us even closer together," Shelley said. "And we plan on eventually having a normal, happy, stable life. When we do get on our feet and get our own home, we plan on building some sort of shelter—this whole thing has changed our life, and we want to give back for the support we're getting now."

"We haven't changed as people," Sean said. "Our situation has just changed. We'll always be who we are, even though this happened to us. I know things will eventually work out. I've always been a hard-working guy, but it took me a long time to realize life isn't fair."

The names of the family in this story were changed to protect their identity.

Uncommon visitor to World's End in Hingham make the definitive identification by listening to the bird's unique call.

Since then the ranger's log book at the gate of the park owned by the Trustees of Reservations is full of sightings from people who drove all the way from places such as Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York to see the bird.

"One gentleman who lives on Martha's Vineyard left a book signing to drive up," said ranger Mike Frizzell on Saturday morning. By that time, there had been 10 confirmed sightings.

But soon a Hingham man, a group of birders from Western Massachusetts and another group from Brookline returned to the gate to report successful sightings.

"It's similar to other king birds but has a different voice," said John Hutchinson of the Allen Bird Club of West Springfield. Hutchinson described the bird's yellow breast and distinctive forked tail.

He explained that most bird club members are "listers" and will add the Tropical King Bird sighting to their list.

Avery explained there are upwards of 700 species of birds in the US and more than 9,000 worldwide.

"One woman had more than 8,000 (sightings) on her list when she died," she said.

Avery explained that the World's End with its habitat often attracts migrant birds. The environment provides berries and insect life that are less likely found in someone's back yard, for example. The area also provides open perches and grassy areas as well as trees. The Tropical King Bird eats insects and feeds over grassy areas.

Clapp of the Audubon Society said the Tropical King Bird at World's End very likely had a "wacky compass" that led it astray.

"It could have gotten stuck in the jet stream but it would be awfully surprising that a bird like this would get high enough."

He said the rareness of the bird in this part of the country makes it special. "It's as if you were a coin collector and found a freshly minted silver dollar," Clapp said.

Avery said if the bird disappears, it would be impossible to tell if it moved on or died.

Clapp said someone trying to capture the bird would run afoul of state and federal migratory bird laws. He said the bird will have a tough time surviving so far away from warmer climes.

"It does not stand much chance of making it through the winter, that's the sad anecdote to all this," he said.

Skippers have their turkey early this year

The Pirates scuttle Cohasset's Thanksgiving hopes, 43-6

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After holding the coveted Thanksgiving Trophy for two years, the Cohasset football team turned it back over to the Pirates of Hull following a decisive 43-6 throttling on Thanksgiving morning.

"We had it for two years, and we are going to do our best to get it back," offered third year coach Tony Rolfe, who experienced his first ever loss to Hull.

Two years ago, the Skippers beat Hull for the first time since 1985, and tied last year to keep the trophy in Cohasset, but nothing seemed to go right this time around against Hull.

After a three-and-out forced Cohasset to punt on the first offensive possession of the game, Hull drove 72 yards en route to their first of six touchdowns.

The touchdown was scored by senior wide receiver Mike McNamara on a 23-yard strike from senior quarterback Rob Scully. By the end of the quarter, Scully had thrown another touchdown, a 58-yarder to senior Chris Rand. Senior halfback Jim Foley ran one in a few minutes later from a yard out.

"We looked up and the score was 21-0," said Rolfe. "We never recovered from that the rest of the game."

The Pirates were the beneficiaries of four Skipper fumbles, as they scored three of their touchdowns off turnovers.

"It seemed like every time they scored, we answered with a fumble," joked Rolfe.

Hull's senior tailback Ken Sault was thought to be the Pirate's primary threat offensively. But apart from his 171 yards rushing on 15 carries and the fact that he accounted for two touchdowns— one running, the other throwing—he was virtually a non-factor.

"That's their secret: they have so many weapons," explained Rolfe. "It was the passing game that hurt us."

Well, the cat is out of the bag for anyone who watched Scully's air attack. The senior completed 7-of-8 passes for 172 yards, including two touchdowns and no interceptions.

Cohasset junior quarterback Jason Brown had one of his best games of the season, completing 6-of-10 with no interceptions.

"We looked up and the score was 21-0. We never recovered from that the rest of the game."
Cohasset head football coach Tony Rolfe

Three of Brown's completions were to freshman Chris Bilodeau, one of the young talents on the Skippers who is expected to play a bigger role in the coming years.

"Chris had a great game, especially for a freshman," effused Rolfe.

This game included a pre-game "Senior Recognition" ceremony, during which all of the Skipper seniors— (captain) Brian Krupczak, (captain) Craig Davis, Justin Langham, Chris Golden, Jeff Scribner and Ronan Buick— and their mothers were acknowledged for their contributions this year.

Krupczak, with 45 yards on only 10 carries, combined with sophomore Braun Goodson and Brown to give Cohasset over 100 yards on the ground.

Goodson scored the first varsity touchdown of his career with less than a minute left.

During halftime, a ceremony took place honoring the memory of long time Athletic Director Clark Chatterton, who was lost to cancer this past summer.

"After a game like this, he would have been the guy I would have gone to for some cheering up," said Rolfe.

Game Notes

-Hull did not punt in the first half.

-Cohasset only lost the second half 7-6. In fact, in both of Cohasset's two worst losses this year, this one and a 29-6 loss to Carver, Cohasset was overrun in one half, and lost 7-6 in the other. Also, they were both home games. Scary.

-Twice in the fourth quarter, block in the back penalties on Hull forced Ken Sault touchdown runs to be called back.

-14 Skippers had at least one tackle, eight had three.

-Hull attempted a fake punt on fourth-and-three in the second quarter that failed. The turnover on downs was Hull's only turnover of the game.

-How do you know when things are really not going your way? When an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty forces the Pirates to attempt a 17-yard two point conversion, and they make it.

-McNamara and Rand both scored two touchdowns, and turned 18 years old.

-The end zone, instead of the normal "Skippers" painting, displayed "Clark" in honor of Chatterton.

Mariner All-Scholastic boys soccer team

Cohasset's Shea named among areas elite

When undertaking a project such as this, it's a given that difficult choices will have to be made. On that front, this job was everything we expected and more.

In the process of naming this team, we requested and received input from several area coaches. We tried to consider the best players regardless of what school they played for.

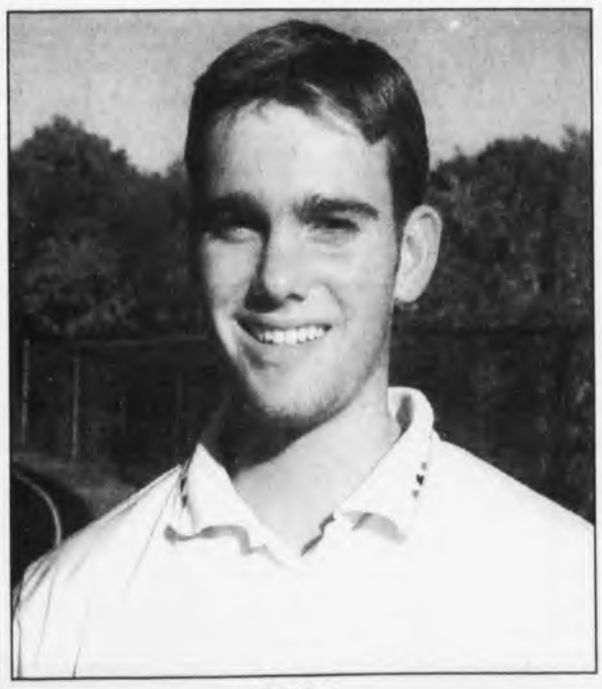
As it turned out, our All-Scholastic team is dominated by those who played for respective league champions, including five from Marshfield, the Division 1 Eastern Mass Champions.

Cohasset's Erik Shea was a name mentioned by virtually everyone we consulted, and became an early lock for the team.

There were several decisions that were much more difficult, however, among them the decision to leave Cohasset's Doug O'Brien off the team (though he did receive a High Honorable mention). The senior captain led the Skippers in scoring this year and was a force on the offensive end throughout the season and during the Skippers inspired run into the Southeast Sectional's semi-final game.

Junior forward Matt Bilodeau also received lots of support to earn him an Honorable Mention.

Without further ado, here's the team we chose:



Erik Shea

Erik Shea (Sr)- Cohasset - sweeper

Scored six goals and added seven assists....voted the #3 player in South Shore League behind Norwell's Anderson and Camerota...An SSL and Eastern Mass All-Star....Another Crusader, Erik was the first non-Marshfield resident to be offered a spot on the Massachusetts Elite Premiere League Club, doing so at the age of 12....He is looking over offers from several schools, including Williams, Amherst and Middlebury... He has been used primarily as a sweeper for both the Skippers team and the Crusaders, but Cohasset coach Dave Nigro moved him up to midfield on occasion when he felt the team needed to become more offensive minded...Cohasset Coach Dave Nigro: "Erik just owned the middle of the field all year and showed a lot of versatility when we moved him to the front line. He's just a very gifted player."

Jarrod Anderson (Sr)- Norwell- Forward

Scored 32 goals this season to break the school's single season scoring record to help lead the Clippers to a perfect regular season (15-0)... He also added eight assists on the season ....A number

Seniors romp, 28-6, in annual grudge-fest

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Every year, the day before Thanksgiving, the female seniors of Cohasset High School face-off against the upstart juniors in a test of strength, speed, endurance, and above all pride.

That's right, it's the Powderpuff Football Game. As the seniors traditionally win, they get bragging rights that they hold over their younger counterparts until June.

"The seniors are supposed to win," said senior quarterback Sarah Kidder, who scored her team's fourth touchdown of the game on a 75 yard keeper. "There was a lot of pressure on me to call the right plays."

And tradition continued last Wednesday, with the elders romping, 28-6.

Neither team picked up as much as a first down on their first offensive possession, but the seniors got the offense started on their second drive, and never let up.

Senior Maureen Equi, captain of this past year's girls soccer team, scored the first two touchdowns of the game.

Kerry McCarthy, a soccer and track and field specialist, also ran

Coastal Stars are soaring

By Alan Smith
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

With the Coastal Stars having completed the first third of the season (nine games), it seemed a good time to assess the team's progress.

The Coastal Stars Squirt "C" squad is comprised of three players from Cohasset and thirteen from Marshfield. Our practices began in August with the games starting in October. The season, including playoffs, will run through April. This is the longest season of any youth sport, and the coaches acknowledge and appreciate the dedication and involvement of the parents.

The season opened with a dominating 9-0 win over Duxbury but was followed by a tough 4-3 loss against a strong Stars-3 team coached by Dick Cullen. The next two games found the team down 3-2 after two periods. In each of these games we rallied in the third period, first tying Pembroke 5-5 and then beating the Seahawks 5-4. The squad then put together its two

Day."

"It was a nice way to recognize him and his family," Ford said.

In order to raise money for the memorial fund, Cohasset will hold an annual 6 kilometer walk/run on the morning of homecoming.

Also, every summer, a block of tickets for one of the Music Circus shows will be reserved for the honor committee with the proceeds going to the fund.

"It was the other love of his life," Mrs. Chatterton remembered. This would have been Clark Chatterton's 40th summer at the Music Circus.

Two of Cohasset's varsity teams —boys soccer and girls field hockey — were strong contenders in the State Tournament for their respective sports. They also dedicated their seasons to the memory of Chatterton.

"He was proud of every team that ever came out of Cohasset," smiled Mrs. Chatterton, who mentioned how touched she was when she heard that the field hockey team was wearing black arm bands for every game, and on their hands wrote CCC Chatterton's Classy Chicks.

"I know he is up there with a scarf around his neck and a pea coat watching us," said varsity field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick with a smile.

Chatterton, president of his class all four years he attended Cohasset, and athletic director for two and a half decades, was a pillar of leadership.

Captain of three sports, quarterback of the famous undefeated 1957 football team, and drafted by the New York Mets, Chatterton was also a pillar of athletic excellence.

1999 Cohasset Citizen of the Year, and namesake of the Clark Chatterton South Shore League Sportsmanship Award, he was a pillar of affability.

"You just want to sit in his office and he'll cheer you up," said varsity football coach Tony Rolfe.

Ford, who has the difficult task of succeeding Chatterton, said, "I am not even going to try to fill those shoes. There is no replacing him."

one in to round out the scoring.

The junior's only touchdown of the game was scored by fleet footed halfback Kristin Sheerin, also a terrific gymnast.

With less than two weeks to transform a group of eager ladies into a lean mean fighting machine, both teams held practices out in the cold to prepare.

Senior coaches David Magnussen, Chairman of the Science Department, Ron Emmons (English) and Dennis Walsh (Math), and junior managers Edward Leary (English Chairman) and Robert Knurek (History Chairman) worked hard to ready their squads for the game.

The night before the game, both teams showed their team spirit by spending the evening decorating their team's hallway with a Powderpuff theme.

The seniors intimidated the juniors with a graveyard littered with tombstones, each displaying the name of a junior player. Ironically, the juniors' theme was "We will survive," and they decorated their hallway to imitate the island from this year's hit show "Survivor."

of Division 2 colleges are looking at him, including UMass-Dartmouth, Salva Regina and Roger Williams….He has been a member of the Massachusetts Elite Premiere League Club team, the Crusaders, coached by Silver Lake Athletic Director Bill Johnson, since he was 12-years old….A Globe All-Scholastic and a member of both the South Shore League and Eastern Mass All-Star team…Norwell coach John Osgood: "Jarrod just has that scorer's knack you can't teach. He works for the shot he wants and then the ball just explodes off his foot."

Brian Johnson (Sr)-
Marshfield- Forward

Netted 25 goals to go along with eight assists ...was one of just three Massachusetts players named to the High School All-American soccer team, teammate Chris Corcoran being another. These two became just the second and third Marshfield High players ever to receive this honor… He has been a member of the Massachusetts Elite Premiere League Club team, the Crusaders, coached by his father, Silver Lake Athletic Director Bill Johnson, since he was 10-years old…Played through a painful hip injury in last few games of the Ram's run to a state championship…Brian is considering offers from several Division 1 colleges, among them Rutgers, B.U. and UMass….Marshfield head coach Dennis Lassige: "Brian has a great scorer's knack of lulling defenders to sleep and then suddenly exploding. He takes defenders on and sometimes I'm amazed he can even get a shot off, never mind a good one."

Chris Camerota (Sr)-
Norwell- midfielder

Netted 15 goals and 18 assists for the South Shore League champion Clippers….voted the " #1 player" in the South Shore League by the coaches. Camerota came to life in the tourney, filling much of the offensive void left by the three game absence of top scorer Jarrod Anderson… Along with Anderson, and several other members of the Mariner's team, Chris has been a member of the Massachusetts Elite Premiere League Club team, the Crusaders, coached by Silver Lake Athletic Director Bill Johnson, since he was 12-years old….He is being looked at by several local colleges, including Providence, Babson, Stonehill and Brandeis…A member of the Eastern Mass All-Star team….Norwell Coach John Osgood: "Chris is just a special, special player who seems to be able to do just about anything he wants on a soccer field and who is at his best when it matters most."

Stuart Dykes (Sr.)-
Hingham- midfielder

Scored 29 goals and added five assists for the Patriot League champion Harbormen (15-4-1), despite missing three games with an injury…Dykes proved to be a phenomenal one year pickup for the Hingham High squad, having moved with his family from England last August. He was named to both the Patriot League and Eastern Mass. All-Star teams… The senior has not really looked at U.S universities, as he intends to return to his native Britain to complete his education and continue his soccer career…Hingham coach Ken Carlin: "You'd be hard pressed to find a player as intelligent as Stuart. He's an extremely sound player fundamentally, and just has so much poise around the net, forcing the keeper to commit before taking his shot."

Ian Duggan (Sr.)-
Silver Lake- midfielder

Scored nine goals and added nine assists this year in helping the Lakers to an unbeaten season in Old Colony League play…voted the #3 overall player in the OCL by the league's coaches…a member of both the OCL and All State team….He is currently considering offers from Northeastern, Bryant and Springfield, among others….Also a returning member of the Silver Lake varsity basketball team…Silver Lake coach Jeff Doyle: "In addition to being a very talented player, Ian was the coach for us on the field this year. He dictated the pace of the game, and set up all of our re-starts like corners and free kicks."

Chris Corcoran (Sr.)-
Marshfield - midfielder

Scored 15 goals, and added 16 assists… was one of just three Massachusetts players named to the High School All-American soccer team, teammate Brian Johnson being another. These two became just the second and third Marshfield High players ever to receive this honor…A lock to play Division 1 soccer, Chris is hoping to land at St. John's (1997 NCAA champions), but has also heard from Wake Forest and South Carolina… He has been a member of the Massachusetts Elite Premiere League Club team, the Crusaders, coached by Silver Lake Athletic Director Bill Johnson (the father of Brian), since he was 10-years old….Marshfield coach Dennis Lassige: "Chris is one of the best overall players I've ever seen. When you go to a game, he's the one who just automatically seems to draw your focus. He controls the tempo of the game, and it's amazing how he just seems to do it all so smoothly and effortlessly. He's a great kid too."

Nick Call (Sr)-
Marshfield- stopper

Scored four goals this year…He flat out dominates the middle of the field with his physical style, skills and relentless approach, which prompted his teammates to dub him "The Ultimate Warrior."…Several Division 2 and 3 schools— such as St. Anselm, Bryant and Stonehill— have contacted him, though he's still hoping to drum up some interest from Division 1 schools…That effort may be helped by his upcoming play at national showcase tourneys as a member of the Massachusetts Elite Premiere League Club team (yes, another one), the Crusaders, which he has been a member of since he was 10 years old… Marshfield coach Dennis Lassige: "Nick gives 100 percent 100 percent of the time. He gets to just about every loose ball, and can do a lot of nice things with the ball once he gets it. He's supposed to be a defensive specialist, but he's shown the ability to carry it and set people up as well."

Eben Gunnarson (Sr)-
Marshfield- sweeper.

Had a goal and three assists, with the goal coming on a 22-yard free kick in a blowout against Whitman-Hanson. Of course, his game is more about defense, and the numbers that represent his value are 10 and 21, as in 10 goals in 21 games… Another of the original Crusaders team members, joining at the age of 10 along with five of his Marshfield High teammates…He plays fullback with the Crusaders… Has talked to representatives from a few local colleges (including Curry and Salva Regina), as well as a few down south, division 1 Coastal Carolina among these… Marshfield coach Dennis Lassige: "Eben is so underrated. He could play anywhere on the field, but he played the often overlooked sweeper position for us, and did everything I could have asked for and more. He's just a good overall player."

Eric Danner (Sr.)-
Silver Lake- Sweeper

Scored seven goals and added five assists despite being used exclusively at sweeper…Did most of his damage on offense off of set plays, as he moved into the goal box on corners and close in free kicks… voted the #1 player in the Old Colony League by the league's coaches…a member of the OCL and All State All-Star teams…Stonehill, Brandeis, Wheaton and Bowdoin are among the primary suitors at the moment, though he is also considering Mass.Maritime, as he is interested in pursuing a career in Environmental Science…He has been an occasional member of the Crusaders Club team of the Massachusetts Elite Premiere League, and will accompany them to a showcase tourney in Tampa Bay after Christmas…. Silver Lake coach Jeff Doyle: "Eric just controlled the middle of the field for us this year. He was extremely versatile and gave it all he had all the time no matter what we asked of him."

Aaron Kleinerman (Sr)-
Marshfield- Keeper

Allowed just 10 goals and recorded 14 shutouts in 21 games… Yet another of the original Crusaders, joining the Massachusetts Elite Premiere League Club team at the age of 10, along with five of his Marshfield High teammates… Has heard from Division 1 powerhouse St. John's, but is also considering offers from Lafeyette, Brandeis, Williams, Bucknell and WPI, among others….An Eastern Mass All-Star…

Marshfield coach Dennis Lassige: "Aaron is just a rock steady keeper. He's poised, confident and athletic; everything a quality keeper needs."

most impressive games to date, with a 2-0 win over Cape Cod and an 8-1 beating of the Seahawks. The players learned that hard skating does have its rewards. In the next game they built a 4-1 lead after two, but had it slip away to a very determined Cape Cod team and lost 6-5. The next game was excellent as they beat Plymouth 8-3, with two players recording hat tricks. Today's game was outstanding as the squad beat visiting Plymouth 5-1, with Kristen McColgan making some great saves in net and the entire team skating hard.

As they looked back, the team's coaching staff could cite many positive things. The attendance at practices and games has been outstanding, a direct reflection of the dedication of the players and parents. The children are having a great time, making friends, working hard and developing respect for each other. It is hoped these experiences will stay with them always and that they will continue to enjoy the game.

Through the first nine games, the Stars have fourteen players that have scored points, four of whom are in double digits. Jake Metcalfe, Kevin Matthews, Taylor Smith and Tyler Anderson have led the offense. Frank Wheelright has been superb since returning after missing the first three games due to illness. The remaining forwards are working hard, improving and getting their chances, making us even more optimistic about the remainder of the season.

The defense has really taken shape in the last four games thatnks to a great combination of experience and grit from Mike Valenti, RJ Mahaney, Matt Kerens, and the emergence of Tess Calorio and the Barry twins, Patrick and Gerry. Their confidence and level of play is on the rise.

The goaltending has been excellent. The team has two shutouts to date. Ethan Coppenrath has been the regular goalie and is 3-1-1. Kristen McColgan has filled in for three games and is 3-0 with a shutout, while Thomas Lemaire was superb in his only start.

Head Coach Len Coppenrath has been involved in youth hockey for many years and truly enjoys coaching. The kids really respond and work hard for him. Steve Matthews, Alan Smith and Mike Valenti are the assistants and were involved in the Coastal Stars program last year. The coaching philosophy revolves around a desire to help the players learn the game, have fun and to improve their skills.

In summary, the season has been great so far. The players' dedication has been displayed through their attendance and hard work. They are developing friendships and learning to respect each other as individuals while gaining a better understanding of teamwork. They are having fun playing the game and working on their skills, and we could ask for nothing more.

state director of the program under the state's Executive Office on Elder Affairs will give an informational presentation on the $52.2 million state program at the South Shore Community Center Dec. 13 at 10 a.m.

"People should be very interested in how this particular version differs from perhaps the Blue Cross plan," said Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs Director Kathy Bryanton. "We have been assured that it's been well researched, and that the program is for many people who have fallen through the cracks of other programs."

The prescription insurance program, said Buckley, who saw a similar presentation as part of the South Shore Elder Services, is available to anyone over the age of 65, at any income level, who is not eligible for Medicaid.

The way the program will work, according to Buckley, is that anyone over the age of 65 can buy into this insurance program, even if they already receive some prescription cost coverage from another insurance company. Subscribers will pay a monthly premium, based on income level. Households with gross incomes of less than 188 percent of the federal poverty level (one person, $15,708) will have their premium paid for by the state. Those making above 188 percent will pay at least $15 but not more than $82 a month, no matter how much the person makes. Prescription co-pays will be $3 or $10.

The as-of-yet unnamed program, partly based on a plan offered by Therese Heinz, wife of US Senator John Kerry, D-Mass., will go into effect April of 2001. Married couples will have a separate rate schedule.

Also eligible for the program are people under the age of 65, who meet certain disability guidelines, and work less than 40 hours a month.

Though everyone is welcome to sign up, the program may not be for everyone, said Buckley. "Because some people have insurance plans with their pensions they probably don't need it," he explained. "But anyone buying health insurance on their own HMOs only get $150 per quarter for prescription drugs. Blue Cross/Blue Shield pays for all [prescription costs] but it's $220 a month extra for your premium. If you get this from the state, you're paying $82 a month at the most."

People with coverage from HMOs can still apply for the plan, but have to use up the benefits from that insurance plan first, before the state benefits kick in. But Buckley said most companies want to get rid of drug benefits in their coverage plans. "If this gets going, I won't be surprised if insurance companies change their plans."

Bryanton said the purpose of the forum is allow residents to find out if this is the program for them. She also said if anyone needs a ride or directions to contact Elizabeth in the Elder Affairs Office at 383-9112, or contact outreach worker Carol Barrett with any questions.

the stores would have their windows done up and we'd go from display to display."

Beechwood Congregational Church on Church Street also participates in the event and members hope shoppers will make the drive over the Beechwood for some additional buys.

Though every church is responsible for what goes on in their own halls, one church is responsible for all of the fair's advertising. This year, the honor falls with Panagia Greek Orthodox.

Lofgren said each year a church specializes in one particular area, such as baked goods, wreaths, sewing, or ornaments. Lofgren said her church, Panagia Greek Orthodox, will sell live greens, wreaths, trees, and, of course, Greek pastries. The church will also sell homemade ornaments and tree skirts.

At St. Stephen's, the Rev. Cliff Cutler said the church will feature its usual book fair, as well as have an "old time country store" in its upper hall. Downstairs, the Appalachia Service Project will sponsor a "Secret Room" for kids only, that will allow them to buy gifts for their parents and wrap them, without mom and dad seeing what they are getting. Proceeds will go to the organization and its annual trip to Appalachia.

Scenes of Appalachia will also be on display at the Second Congregational Church, said the Rev. Gary Ritts. He said the church will feature an assortment of authentic Appalachian crafts, as well as a traditional New England Clam Chow-dah bar.

Beechwood will feature homemade sea-glass candy, other baked goods and crafts.

First Parish will have a "junque" sale alongside a Swedish bakery and coffee bar. It also will sell Christmas trees for $35, any tree, any size.

The fair will run from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The whole point of a holiday fair, such as this, is it gives the townspeople a chance to show up their skills, whether it's needlepoint, decorating, or other crafts. "There are a lot of talented people in Cohasset," Lofgren said. "It's amazing what they can do."

Cutler said the fair allows the entire town to join in a holiday celebration. "It gives a way for all the churches in the town to come together in a way that is filled with joy and appreciation and that's really the heart of it," he said. "The fair was started over 50 years ago. The purpose was to overcome divisions between the churches, and they've done that admirably."

"It's a wonderful opportunity for our churches to work together as we love to do," added Ritts.

Santa will take time out of his busy schedule to make an appearance on the Common from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. In case of inclement whether, Santa will be moved to a warm, dry location inside Second Congregational. Cohasset's favorite in-town marching band, the Rusty Skippers, will also perform inside First Parish at noon.

School principals release their improvement plans

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Exercising their title as on-site managers, the principals of the three Cohasset Public Schools presented their respective school improvement plans to the school committee.

Michael Jones, of the Middle/High School, Paul Callahan of the Deer Hill School, and Marilee Cantelmo of the Osgood School received approval of their plans, which ranged from extra MCAS help at the middle/high school, curriculum revision at the Deer Hill, and character education at the Osgood School.

According to school committee chairman Pat Martin, the 1993 Education Reform Act gave more power to the individual schools' principals and established the creation of school councils made up of parents, administrators and teachers.

"It's that group that looks into what a school needs and develops a plan and moves forward," said Martin.

Aside from preparing the school for the upcoming accreditation visit, Jones hopes the middle/high school will:

- provide MCAS support to students whose academic performances indicated the need for extra help
- support the district's goal to increase the integration of technology into the curriculum and instruction
- organize the school for the first phase of the reconstruction project
- improve communications within the school and between the school and the home and community

Though Cohasset has typically done well on the controversial MCAS test, a small minority of students did receive low results. The Class of 2003 (current tenth-graders) will be required to pass the English and math parts of the test before graduating.

As of this fall, every classroom in the middle/high school has a computer and printer. State curriculum guidelines require the integration of technology with traditional teaching methods.

The school, along with the Deer Hill School, will be undergoing a massive school renovation and expansion project scheduled to begin in the spring of 2001.

Jones has started an intra-school memo and a letter to parents updating them on ongoing activities and issues. The letter drew broad praise from the school committee at the meeting.

Callahan presented a 12-item improvement plan to the board. Some of the goals the Deer Hill School Council made were to:

- support the integration of new technology as an instructional tool
- establish programs for the academically advanced students

As of this fall, every classroom in the middle/high school has a computer and printer. State curriculum guidelines require the integration of technology with traditional teaching methods.

- review report card revisions as proposed by staff
- develop community interest and relations
- improve communication between the school and parents through better use of existing practices
- establish a parent mentor program for new Deer Hill parents
- increase awareness of developmental stages of childhood
- support the Deer Hill School Charter Education program

Callahan said the council hopes to set up a parent mentor program as a way to help new residents understand the school system and who to direct any questions to.

Cantelmo broke her goals into four sections: academic excellence, character education, communication, and technology. Some of the Osgood School Council's improvement ideas included:

- continued development and implementation of strategies to reduce the teacher-student ratio
- develop a portfolio that would stay with the child year through year
- continue to get children involved in community action and volunteerism
- improve existing forms of communication and the school website
- continue to seek grant funding to purchase technology equipment.

Martin said the principals made their presentation jointly in order to get on a more "strategic planning process." She said by having the goals improved now, they can be included in ongoing budget discussions for the 2001-2002 school year.

Discount books

The Massachusetts A.A.U. basketball team will sell "Entertainment 2001" discounts book as a fund-raiser to support their New England and national tournament programs. The coupon books offer thousands of dollars in discounts to South Shore and Boston area restaurants, movie theaters, cleaners, department stores, hotels, airlines and many more businesses. Kimball's By the Sea, The Red Parrot, Dependable Cleaners, North End restaurants and all the fast food places are included.

If you would like to purchase a discount book to benefit the MA A.A.U. team, call Sean Connolly at 383-1248.

Secret room

Cohasset ASP is once again helping out the annual village fair to be held on Cohasset Common, Saturday, Dec. 2, between the hours of 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Volunteers will continue their tradition of the Secret Room (at St. Stephen Church) where children, accompanied by an ASP teen-volunteer, may buy and wrap gifts for their siblings and parents. Santa Claus will also make his annual appearance on the common between the hours of 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

OBITUARIES

Colonel Arthur C. King

Colonel Arthur Charles King, 90, of Cohasset, died Nov. 27, 2000, in The Parkwell Nursing Home, Hyde Park, following an extended illness. He was born in Lynn and was a graduate of Boston College High School and Boston College, making him a "double eagle." He later studied at Bridgewater State College and Suffolk University.

A veteran of World War II, Colonel King served in the United States Marine Corps, stationed in the Pacific.

In 1949 he joined the United States Air Force. As a mobilization engineer his active duty was spent at the Pentagon in the radio-TV branch of Office of Information. His superior was General Jimmy Stewart (later the actor). Colonel King retired in 1970. He was a life member of the VFW Post 9146 in Cohasset, where he resided for 49 years.

Colonel King contributed 32 years to the broadcasting industry. His career included the positions of News and Sports Director, Production Manager, Public Affairs Director and Announcer.

He was the recipient of numerous professional awards from the parent company of WEEI (Boston) CBS. The most prized award being the National Conference of Christian & Jews award.

During his tenure as News Director, Colonel King became president of The New England United Press Broadcast Association.

He entered the education field in 1964 after CBS offered him an early retirement. Colonel King completed nine successful years in this field.

They included Hull High School (one year) followed by Saint Joseph School in Quincy Point (two years), and Rockland High School (six years).

Colonel King leaves one sister, Sister Gladys Ellen King, CSJ of Fontbonne Academy, Milton.

Visiting hours will be in The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer Street, Cohasset, Thursday, 3 to 7 p.m.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated Friday at 10 a.m. in Saint Anthony Church, Cohasset. Interment at Saint Mary Cemetery, Lynn.

Arrangements made by The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset.

Contributions may be made to The Sisters of Saint Joseph, (Motherhouse), 637 Cambridge Street, Brighton, 02135.

Edwin E. Daniels

Edwin E. Daniels, 74, of Cohasset, a contractor and a Navy veteran of World War II, died Nov. 24, 2000, at Southwood at Norwell Nursing Home after a long illness.

Born in Boston, Mr. Daniels was raised in Milton and Dedham before moving to Cohasset, where he lived for 36 years.

He graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music in 1949 and played the accordion with a small band.

Mr. Daniels worked as a contractor, electrical estimator and builder. He designed and built Cohasset's Lantern Lane. He recently helped with the completion of the Cohasset Lightkeeper's project.

His hobbies included skiing, boating, fishing around Little Harbor and Minot's Lighthouse, tending his gardens and being a handyman.

He leaves his wife of 49 years, Priscilla D. (Caswell) Daniels; two sons, Scott E. Daniels of Hull and Steven C. Daniels of Norwell; a daughter, Kim D. Blakeslee of Norwell; and seven grandchildren. He was brother of the late Lawrence J. Daniels.

A funeral service was held at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Memorial gifts may be made to the American Cancer Society, 30 Speen St., Framingham, 01701.

René G. Chiasson

René G. Chiasson, 83, of Marshfield, formerly of Cohasset and Barefoot Bay, Fla., died Nov. 20, 2000, at Life Care Center of the South Shore, Scituate.

Born and educated in New Waterford, Novia Scotia, Mr. Chiasson was a former partner of Earl McArthur Plumbing Co. and Owner of René G. Chiasson Plumbing and Heating.

He was a member of the Knights of Columbus, Past Grand Knight, Cohasset Rotary, Master plumber, Member of Master Plumbers Assoc. active Member of St. Anthony Church in Cohasset for 40 years. He was also a Member of the Cohasset Board of Health for 19 years.

Mr. Chiasson leaves his wife, Margaret; Norma Chiasson, of Fla., Wilfredine Lesperance of Westboro, Emily Casedy of Colorado, Rachelle McIntyre of Georgia, Maureen Holland of Marshfield, Theresa Chiasson of Humarock; Elias Chiasson of St. Louis, Armand Chiasson of New Brunswick, Clara Shomp of Hudson; Lina Ballantyne, Adelaide Fredrich of Methuen, Velma Perisse, Elmire Dingwall of New Waterford, Nova Scotia, Corrine LeBlanc of Cheticamp Cape Breton and the late Bertrand Chiasson. Also leaves six grandchildren and 7 great-grandchildren.

World AIDS Day will be recognized with a program on this global epidemic on Wednesday, Dec. 6 at 7:30 p.m. at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset. Robert Shannon, Infectious Disease Epidemiologist for VA Boston Healthcare System, and Charles Gainor, a retired biologist will address the world picture of AIDS, who gets it, how HIV destroys the body, how good are the current treatments, and what preventative measures are necessary. The global HIV/AIDS epidemic has become so alarming that the United States has declared AIDS a national security threat. Sub-Saharan Africa with only 10 percent of the world's population has close to 70 percent of the world's HIV-positive people. The number of children orphaned by AIDS in the Sub-Sahara equals the combined population of New York and Chicago. Sandra Thurman, director of the White House Office of National AIDS Policy observed: "As goes Africa, so will go India, Southeast Asia, and the Newly Independent States of the former Soviet Union, and by 2005, more than 100 million people worldwide will have been infected with HIV.

All communities are affected by the continuing spread of AIDS. In Cohasset, the most recent "Youth Risk Behavior Survey" at the high school found that fewer Cohasset students than in the state or the country as a percentage talked with their parents about HIV/AIDS.

Religious communities have joined together and in an interfaith declaration have said "We are called to love: God does not punish with sickness or disease but is present together with us as the source of our strength, courage and hope."

If you would like more information on this Dec. 6 program about HIV and AIDS, the plague of the century, and the response as religious groups, communities, and individuals, you may call Saint Stephen's Church at (781) 383-1083. All are welcome to attend.

Our sincere thanks to everyone who made it possible to feed over 153,000 hungry families this Thanksgiving

Because of the generous support of Stop & Shop and people like you, the Thanks for Giving Program was able to provide 153,000 Boston area families with a Thanksgiving dinner they won't soon forget. This year, Stop & Shop spread the word throughout the Northeast and to its customers, who contributed nearly $1,000,000. Additionally, Stop & Shop itself donated more than 10,000 fresh turkeys to regional food banks. This generous spirit inspired others to help too. Like Danny and Betsy Nally, two children from Westwood who encouraged Perdue Farms, along with individuals in their community, to give an additional 4,000 turkeys. And the generosity didn't end there. Drake Bakeries, Bread & Circus, Best Foods Baking and Garelick Farms provided even more contributions to make the delicious meal complete. Thanks again to everyone. We couldn't have done it without you!

Retailer caught selling cigarettes to minor

By Rick Collins
WEDNESDAY, 8AM

Shaw's supermarket on Route 3A in Cohasset was called before the Board of Health to answer charges it sold cigarettes to a 15 year old girl earlier this month. The meeting was held last night, after the Mariner went to press.

The sting was part of the effort of the South Shore Boards of Health Tobacco Collaborative to enforce the state's tobacco sale, vending and distribution laws. No person under the age of 18 is allowed to purchase any type of tobacco product. However there are no laws prohibiting those under 18 from using tobacco. State law requires vendors to check the identification of any person who looks to be under the age of 27.

On Nov. 8, the girl walked into the Shaw's supermarket and purchased a pack of Camel cigarettes from a teenage male clerk. According to a report the girl filled out, the only question she was asked was "what kind" of cigarettes she wanted.

Town Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said because it was Shaw's first violation, the store would likely get a written warning and would be required to take part in a tobacco merchant education program offered by the collaborative.

During the sting, which is conducted twice a year, an underage person goes into a store and asks for cigarettes, said Godzik. The student is from out of town so he or she won't be easily recognized. If asked to show identification during a compliance check, the teens are expected to present theirs if they have any. If they aren't carrying an ID, the students are required to say so. The adult partner in the sting waits outside the retail business unless there is a compliance problem.

If he or she is turned away, the store is ruled in compliance and nothing further happens. If the store does sell, the minor and an adult health educator from the collaborative file a report and submit it to the local town board of health. Approximately 17 stores in Cohasset were checked. Shaw's was the only one that sold to the minor.

Though it might just be getting a slap on the wrist this time, Shaw's is taking the matter very seriously.

"Once the individual [who sold the cigarettes] is identified, he will be dismissed," said Shaw's spokesperson Bernard Rogan. "We have a one strike and you're out policy."

Rogan said every sales associate receives training about checking identification and signs an understanding of the policy. "We have no tolerance, what so ever," he explained.

"It's very difficult to say we never have this happen to us," said Rogan. "But from time to time it happens. But it doesn't happen on a regular basis."

According to Godzik, the stings occur as part of a 14-town coalition to curb teenage smoking, through the various towns' boards of health.

A program at the Deer Hill School last week said 3,000 Americans under the age of 18 start smoking every day. A similar sting conducted in Hingham recently, resulted in six merchants selling cigarettes to minors.

Toys for Tots at police station

The Cohasset Police Department again joins the US Marine Corps in the annual Toys for Tots campaign this holiday season.

New toys and games may be dropped off at the Cohasset Police Station, 62 Elm Court, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Any questions, please call the Cohasset police at 383-1055. Toys and games should not be Christmas wrapped.

POLICE BRIEFS

Heart attack could be accident cause

A Norwell man suffered an apparent heart attack that caused a single-car accident on Rte. 3A in Cohasset early Sunday morning, police said.

Salvatore J. Tramontana, 68, of 64 Black Pond Hill in Norwell was stricken while travelling southbound near JJ's Dairy Hut at about 5:16 a.m., police said. When police arrived the Lincoln Town Car was about 12 feet off the road and had hit several trees.

Police administered CPR at the scene until the Cohasset ambulance arrived and took over Tramontana's care. Tramontana was then transported to South Shore Hospital where he was pronounced dead at about 6 a.m., police said.

Tramontana's wife, Joanne Tramontana, 69, who was a passenger in the car, suffered minor visible injuries and was also transported to South Shore Hospital where she was treated and released. Joanne Tramontana told police at the scene that she thought her husband has suffered a heart attack while driving.

Police said the car sustained heavy front-end damage. Both the driver- and passenger-side airbags deployed. Investigation at the scene showed there were no visible skid marks, police said.

Walker dies following apparent heart attack

A 70-year-old Cohasset woman was stricken while walking in Wheelwright Farm on Sunday morning, police said. Grace Donohue, 221 Forest Ave., suffered an apparent fatal heart attack about fi mile into the woods.

Police said a man, who was walking with his grandchildren, sought medical aid for Donohue after finding her lying on the ground. The man contacted his wife from his car phone and asked her to call 9-1-1, he also flagged down a jogger who accompanied him back to where Donohue was located. A few minutes later police and paramedics arrived. Police used their special operations vehicle to transport Donohue out of the woods. Fire department paramedics continued to administer Advanced Life Support but Donohue was later pronounced dead at South Shore Hospital.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said foul play is not suspected.

"She felt sick and sat down and someone came upon her and said he would get help," he said.

Drug arrests

Police arrested two Hull men on drug charges Friday evening following a near collision between the parties' pickup truck and a police cruiser.

The cruiser was travelling westbound on Forest Avenue near Old Coach Road about 5:15 p.m. when the officer observed a small pickup truck with two white males inside heading eastbound crossing over the single, solid yellow line.

The officer had to pull over to the far right to avoid being hit head on, according to the police report.

The officer reversed direction to pull over the pickup, which was missing one headlight. Further investigation revealed the men had illegal drugs in their possession. Police charged the driver, John J. Diggins, Jr., 48, of 14 F St. in Hull with illegal possession of a Class B substance (cocaine); and the passenger, Joseph Carfagna, 47, of 774 Nantasket Ave. with illegal possession of a Class B substance (cocaine) and Class D substance (marijuana).

OUI on Rte. 3A

Police charged James Murphy, 35, of 315-A Proctor Ave., Revere with operating under the influence of liquor and failure to stay within marked lanes following a traffic stop on Rte. 3A last Thursday evening.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said headquarters received a call about a green jeep heading south on 3A that was going all over the road. Subsequently, a police officer also observed the jeep being driven erratically and made the traffic stop at about 7:31 p.m.

Police officer exam

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts Human Resources Division will hold a Civil Service Examination for entry-level police officers, for the cities and towns and MBTA police on April 28.

Applications must be filed or postmarked no later than Jan. 26. Applications and information about eligibility requirements, application fees and the examination process are available at the Massachusetts Human Resources Division, Customer Service Center, One Ashburton Place, Boston, or call (617) 727-3777, ext. 246 or toll-free at 1-800-392-6178, ext. 246.

Application materials are also available at the Cohasset Police Department and the Cohasset Town Hall, Treasurers Office.

Police memorial fund drive

Cohasset police hope residents will contribute to the Massachusetts Law Enforcement Memorial Foundation that plans to erect a permanent memorial to the 260 officers in the state who were killed in the line of duty. Groundbreaking for the memorial at Ashburton Park at the State Capitol will take place during Police Memorial Week in May 2001.

All donations are tax deductible. Checks should be made out to the Mass. Law Enforcement Memorial Foundation and sent to the Cohasset Police Dept., 62 Elm St., Cohasset 02025. For more information, contact Officer Jeffrey R. Treanor, 383-1055 or 383-1212, evenings.

IT'S HAPPENING

Band jam

Cohasset Youth Resources announces a Band Jam for ages 15 and up, at the Garage featuring four local bands on Saturday, Dec. 2, from 6:30 to 10:00 p.m. Performing will be SWEEPS, Last Man Standing, Eat the Path, and Underprivileged.

Doors open and tickets go on sale at 6 p.m. and the first group kicks off at 6:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 per person and due to space limitations, the number of available tickets is limited.

Bands will have CDs available for sale during intermission breaks. Refreshments will also be available at the Garage.

The bands are volunteering their performances and proceeds from this event will be utilized for future events and activities at the Garage.

The Garage is located in downtown Cohasset, directly behind the Red Lion Inn, next to the town parking lot.

Officers elected

At the recent annual meeting of the Cohasset Historic Society, the officers and board of directors for 2000-2001 were elected.

President Martha Gjesteby, First Vice President Susan Grant, Second Vice President Thomas Gruber, Secretary Deborah Jenks, Treasurer John Steel, Immediate Past President John Hovorka.

Board of directors: Werner Diekmann, Barbara Elliot, the Rev. John Gallop, Nancy Gilmore, Paula Kozol, Marilyn Morrison, James Mullen, Kathleen O'Malley and Claire Tinory.

Advent service

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now celebrating its 10th year, St. Stephen's is presenting an Advent Service of Lessons and Carols on Sunday, Dec. 3, at 3 p.m. This service, a long-standing celebration in the English tradition is familiar to those who have heard similar services from King's College and St. John's College in England.

Clergy, acolytes, readers, and choirs combine to present in scripture and song the prophecies of Christ's birth and our redemption. Hymns and carols are sung by all between the readings from Sacred Scripture. This year, some of the highlighted choral music to be presented will include the Gregorian chant "Conditor Alme Siderum," "The Matin Responsory" by Palestrina, and an "Ave Maria" of Rachmaninoff in Russian, conducted by Dr. Fredrick Guzasky, choirmaster at St. Stephen's. There will also be a playing of the 58 bell carillon by carilloneur Sally Slade-Warner a half-hour before the service begins. The Rev. Cliff Cutler will officiate at the service. All are invited to this festival of song-prayer as the Advent seasons begins. There is no admission charge, although donations will be accepted. A light collation will be served afterward. For more information, call (781)383-1083.

Hope\hōp\vb. Hoped; Hoping:
To desire with expectations of fulfillment.

—Employees of CHECKERS

The employees of CHECKERS, a local product servicing company, got together to submit their definition of Hope.

"HOPE is putting your head on your pillow at night knowing that someone else in your community is sleeping more peacefully, is more hopeful and is truly happy because of you and your actions."

– CHECKERS employees, who have started a campaign to have their food demonstrators send back all left over samples for distribution to local food pantries.

Hope comes in all kinds of packages, big and small and each person defines it in their special way. This holiday season, we're asking you to help those in need achieve their own definition of Hope by making a donation to Community Newspaper Company's (CNC) Gifts of Hope campaign.

For the past eight years, readers' Gifts of Hope donations have fed local hungry children and families in and around the Boston area. And now, more than ever, more people need your help. Please join the Cohasset Mariner in giving the greatest gift of all - the gift of hope. A donation of any size goes a long way in helping those in need. Here are some helpful statistics to keep in mind while planning your gift.

- $35 provides a family of three with groceries for one week
- $100 provides 600 pounds of food at a local food pantry
- $25 provides 50 meals for hungry people.

If you are looking to volunteer this holiday season, or are a non-profit organization in need of volunteers, log on to www.townonline.com/giftsofhope for local volunteer opportunities.

Dress up your home for the holidays

Impress buyers by decorating in style

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

For Maureen Contento of Marshfield, getting her home ready for Christmas is a year-round occupation.

"I'm always looking for things that will go well in my house at Christmas. When we travel, or if I'm in an unusual store, I'll be looking for things," said Contento, whose colonial-style, four-bedroom home becomes aglitter with golds, purples and lots of tiny white lights during the holiday.

Contento said she focuses on making every room in her home, including the rooms of her two young boys, festive.

"I put trees in every room, even the boys' bedrooms. They love it, and it really makes the whole house look very Christmas-y," she said.

Contento said she likes to stick with a color scheme throughout the house — golds, greens and lots of shades of purple, her signature color. Her main tree, in the living room, is a mix of the colors throughout the house.

"I like the tree to look like we put some thought into it, and not like we just threw some ornaments on and walked away. But I like it to be kid-friendly, too," said Contento.

According to Diane Kennedy of Kennedy Country Gardens in Scituate, homeowners are spending more time, effort and money on Christmas decorating than ever before.

> "All people need to do is to walk through, and choose what they like the best, and go home and copy it."
> Robert Mowbray of Village Gardens

"I think people really want to make their home stand out, really make it special at Christmastime," said Kennedy, who noted that the focus for them at Kennedy's is to offer a good variety of greens, trees and decorations for the season. Kennedy's offers ten varieties of Massachusetts-grown, freshly cut trees and lots of wreaths and roping options.

"The boxwood wreaths are popular because they are a little different looking and they are very long-lasting. We also have fresh seasonal greens bundled, so people can get creative and put them wherever they want," said Kennedy.

Kennedy's also has pretty baskets filled with different greens and decorated with ribbons, that can be placed on a front stoop or hung on a door or wall. "It's just a variation on the wreath theme," she said.

At Village Gardens in Norwell, their heavy, lush roping, made of mixed varieties of greens, are popular. Robert Mowbray of Village Gardens said traditional New England looks, such as Williamsburg-style wreaths trimmed with fruits and natural berries, are also popular.

Mowbray said Village Gardens specializes in unusual greens and other natural decorations such as eucalyptus, eucalyptus pods, pears, pomegranates, pepper berries and magnolia leaves, hard to get in New England but beautiful for holiday decorating.

Mowbray said these greens are available for sale individually or can be made up into swags for windows or mantels and can have a more formal look or natural look, depending on what accessories and ribbons are added. Mowbray also said that Village Gardens can help those perplexed over their window boxes in winter.

"We've got 15 flower boxes on display to give ideas. All people need to do is to walk through, and choose what they like the best, and go home and copy it," he said.

Christmas, naturally

Botanical holiday celebration is science center fundraiser

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Mother earth is the main attraction of this year's holiday celebration at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell.

The science center will host a new event this season called "A Natural Christmas" Dec. 1 and 2. The center will kick off the event Friday with a reception and silent auction from 4-7 p.m.

"This is the first year we're doing this," said Joan Reid, the public relations director at the science center. "It's a new kind of fundraiser for us." She added the funds raised from the silent auction will be used to implement new kinds of educational programs at the science center.

Reid said a number of different garden centers, florists, and other

Edaville Railroad hosts its popular Christmas light festival

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The Edaville Railroad's Light Festival is a big holiday draw. This year more than 200,000 lights will brighten the Carver attraction.

It is an old tradition with a new life.

The Christmas light festival at Edaville Railroad in Plymouth is once again going strong. More than $300,000 was spent on this year's celebration—there are currently more than 200,000 lights set up at the railroad for this year's holiday festivities.

The light festival opened Nov.17 and will continue through Jan.7, 2001.

"This is a tradition that dates back to the 1940s," said Edaville Railroad spokesperson Dave Kindy. "The tradition was interrupted in 1991 when the (Edaville) railroad closed, but now it's better than it ever has been. It's an extremely popular event because many members of older generations remember it fondly. You have people going to the light festival who are 50 and 60-years-old saying things like 'Oh yeah, I remember that from when I was a kid.'"

Skillet noodles have more flavor

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Most home cooks boil pasta, drain it, and then dump sauce on top. This method results in two ingredients that are never properly married. In Italy, however, home cooks briefly drain pasta and then add it to the skillet that contains the sauce. The noodles are then heated with the sauce for just a minute so that the flavors meld. I wanted to take this notion one step further by cooking not just a sauce but a heartier dish in a skillet along with pasta, either Chinese or Italian noodles. Would the noodles have to be precooked? How could I boost the flavor of the skillet ingredients? Were there any shortcuts to making this a quick, simple dish?

I started with a few common ingredients: chicken, soy sauce, chicken stock, onions, and noodles. I sautéed the chicken, removed it, cooked the onion until soft, and then added soy sauce, chicken stock, some sherry, and the cooked chicken. I then finished the dish by adding precooked noodles. The result? Well, it was bland in both appearance and flavor.

My first thought was that the chicken could be marinated in soy sauce and sherry before cooking, a common practice in stir-fry recipes. This added a lot of flavor to the meat. Next, I decided on some minced garlic and ginger for a flavor boost. A bit of sugar was also helpful, as was the addition of sautéed red pepper, which added both color and a touch of sweetness. While sliced mushrooms were nice but unnecessary, a splash of roasted sesame oil added toward the end of cooking perked up the dish. A few scallions for garnish completed the job.

I tested chicken thighs versus boneless, skinless breast meat and preferred the latter since the thighs were a bit chewy. I liked the chicken best when sliced thinly, so I placed it in the freezer for half an hour before cutting. Now I could cut it into paper-thin slices. Although this dish is sort of Asian in nature, I was wary of Chinese or Japanese noodles. Scores of brands and types are available (each requiring different cooking methods), and, in my experience, they are more prone to sticking together during cooking than Italian dried pasta. So, sticking to supermarket pastas, I tried vermicelli, spaghetti, thin spaghetti, angel hair, and fettuccini. I liked the thin spaghetti and angel hair best since the chicken stock sauce was so light. I was keen on eliminating a step by finding a method for adding uncooked pasta to the skillet, but the pasta would not cook evenly. It was much better to boil the pasta until almost done, drain it, and then add it to the pan. Finally, I tested fresh pasta, thinking I might be able to add it directly to the pan since it cooks so rapidly, but it simply became gummy.

SKILLET NOODLES WITH CHICKEN, GARLIC, AND GINGER

This recipe is quite similar to a stir-fry but for the addition of liquid and pasta. If you like, you can use pork instead of chicken or substitute other vegetables for the red pepper. Toasted sesame oil is very dark and fragrant, unlike regular sesame oil, and is often referred to as roasted sesame oil. Be sure to use a large skillet, at least 12 inches in diameter

3/4 pound boneless, skinless chicken breast, placed in the freezer for about 30 minutes or until firm but not frozen
1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon soy sauce
1 tablespoon sherry
1 tablespoon peanut or vegetable oil
1 1/2 cups onion cut into 1/8-inch slices about 1 medium
1 1/2 cups red bell pepper cut into 1/8 inch slices, about 1/2 large
1 tablespoon finely minced garlic
1 tablespoon finely minced ginger
1 1/4 cups low-sodium chicken stock
1 teaspoon sugar
1 pound thin spaghetti or angel hair pasta
1 1/2 tablespoons toasted sesame oil
3 scallions, thinly sliced

1. Remove the chicken from the freezer and slice very thinly. Place in a small bowl with 1 tablespoon soy sauce and the sherry and toss to evenly combine. Set aside for 10 minutes, tossing occasionally. (This can be done while you are preparing the vegetables.) Place a large pot of salted water over high heat to boil.

2. Place a large skillet (at least 12 inches) over medium-high heat. When hot add the oil and then the chicken. Cook the chicken for about 5 to 7 minutes or until it is opaque and cooked through, stirring frequently. Remove and set aside. Add the onion and pepper and cook for about 3 minutes or until softened, with just a hint of browning. Add the garlic and ginger and cook for an additional 2 minutes. Add the additional 1 teaspoon soy sauce, the chicken stock, and the sugar. Place the cooked chicken pieces back in the skillet and allow all to simmer together until sauce is very slightly thickened, about 5 minutes. At this point the sauce may be turned off while waiting for the pasta, but it should be returned to a simmer before the cooked pasta is added.

3. Meanwhile, cook the pasta according to the package instructions minus 2 minutes. Drain the pasta and add it to the skillet along with the sesame oil. Carefully toss the pasta to evenly coat with the sauce for about 1 minute (the pan will be quite full at this point). Remove from heat and sprinkle with the sliced scallions. Serve immediately. Serves 4 to 6.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 29

The combination of a Capricorn moon and applying Mercury/Saturn opposition impacts the day. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. Stop worrying about situations you have no control over. Instead, take on a full agenda; stay busy with practical projects. Zero in on jobs that have been left hanging; follow through and tie up loose ends. You can be most productive. Influences this evening are best for working. Plan to burn the midnight oil and get work or study projects out of the way.

THURSDAY, NOV. 30

Conflicting planetary influences can make for a challenging day. The Capricorn moon becomes inactive at 2:34 a.m. until 9:26 a.m., when it enters freedom-loving Aquarius. However, a Mercury/Saturn polarity prepares to culminate tomorrow. It may put a damper on today's mood and activities. Allow extra time for unexpected delays, setbacks, obstacles. You may be forced to face the realities of a career or domestic matter. Keep an open mind. Look for new, innovative solutions.

FRIDAY, DEC. 1

December features a spectacular solar eclipse on Christmas Day. Plan to go all out this holiday season; planetary influences are the best for socializing, celebrating. Today the Mercury/Saturn opposition culminates at 9:07 a.m. Sidestep morning hassles or the blues. As the day goes on, storm clouds move out. The Aquarius moon aligns with Mars and Uranus this evening. Let fun and games top your agenda. Take a walk on the wild side.

SATURDAY, DEC. 2

A 120-degree alignment of Mars/Uranus sets a quick pace this morning. You can be most productive, if you have a clear plan of action and stick to it. It is best to initiate new activities before 11:18 a.m., when this alignment occurs. A lunar contact to Saturn may bring a lull period between 1:10-4:10 p.m. Slow down; relax and unwind. At 7:51 p.m. the Aquarius moon becomes inactive until 10:23 p.m., when it enters Pisces. Parties and social gatherings get the green light.

SUNDAY, DEC. 3

A lunar contact to Jupiter this morning warns against overdoing on any level. Balance optimism with discretion. The moon continues its travel in Pisces, prompting you to seek a creative outlet for your energies. The planet Mercury moves into Sagittarius at 3:26 p.m., remaining there until December 22. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:55 p.m., signaling a full moon buildup until December 11. A lunar alignment to Pluto may stir up emotional thunderstorms this evening. Keep it light. Meditate for inner peace.

MONDAY, DEC. 4

An alignment of the sun and Pluto takes the spotlight this morning and may generate a serious, intense mood. If you can, take quiet time out for yourself. Reassess your values, set new goals. Look for deeper spiritual meanings. As the day goes on, potentially difficult influences ease up, and the afternoon and evening rate high. The combination of a Pisces moon and harmonious Venus/Saturn alignment is ideal for initiating new starts of all kinds, in your business or personal life.

TUESDAY, DEC. 5

This morning may be slow-starting. Allow extra time to get where you are going. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 2:26 a.m. and travels at the tail end of the zodiac. Influences turn around completely, however, at 9:17 a.m., when the moon enters energetic Aries. The green light goes on for launching new ventures. Take on a full work agenda; you can be most productive. Be sure to sign contracts before 3:07 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Mercury. Lunar alignments to Neptune and Jupiter set the stage for a pleasant evening. Kick back and go for the good times.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 6

The planet Mercury takes the spotlight today. Mercury aligns with Neptune in the afternoon and Jupiter this evening. Combined with an impulsive Aries moon, its influence may tempt you to overdo, overextend. Don't make foolish promises or spur of the moment decisions you will later regret. Slow down. On the other hand, influences today are prime for getting things done. Roll up your sleeves and stay busy with practical projects. A rough spot is in effect between 8:50-11:50 p.m., when the moon opposes Mars. Keep a cool head. Know when it's time to call it a night.

On 'track' for the holidays

Even though the lights are the main attraction for the Edaville Christmas festival, there are other ways to have fun at the event.

Kindy said one of the main attractions of the railroad this year is the new fully restored, fully-functional steam engine called the Anne Elizabeth. The engine dates back to 1936—it actually was used for 40 years at a sugar plantation on the Fiji Islands before it was acquired by a collector from the United States.

Edaville is also decorated for the holidays. Displays at the railroad include things like "The ice palace at the North Pole, the Village at Peacedale," and even a gingerbread house with lights on it.

There are also children's rides at the railroad including a flying elephant ride, a red baron airplane ride, and of course, a carousel. Jolly old St. Nick will also be on hand. Food and refreshments are also available at the park.

Kindy said a popular attraction at the park is also the train museum on the premises filled with antique trucks and all kinds of antique train equipment.

And what would be a visit to Edaville without an actual ride on a train? Kindy said a special train ride at the park goes around a 5.5 mile track and gives the public a chance to view the light-covered property from the comfortable confines of an Edaville train—a train which holds a great deal of history.

Kindy said Ellis D. Atwood, the former owner of the Edaville property, bought the train and the 5.5 mile track back in 1945. Atwood's initials, E.D.A., inspired the name of the property today.

"Atwood was a cranberry grower," Kindy said. "He had 1800 of acres of land around here. He bought a defunct railway from a place in Maine because he figured he could use it to harvest his cranberries just a little bit easier. That's the same railway which is there today."

Kindy said the light festival tradition was born out of Atwood having the train on his property.

"(Atwood) used to take his friends for rides on the train," he said. "After that, taking those rides gained popularity with more and more people from around the area. When the early 1950s rolled around, Atwood started decorating the property with Christmas lights each year, and that was that."

Kindy said the Christmas light tradition has lasted since then. He said when Edaville closed from 1991-1999, there was a huge void in the holiday season for many of the people who always enjoyed the tradition. And when Edaville Railroad and its famous light festival reopened in 1999, many people were excited about it.

"We had about 100,000 lights in 1999," Kindy said. "We just felt like we'd spend the money and make it something extra special this year."

"The light festival we had in 1999 was alright, but it wasn't where we wanted to be with the event," said Brenda Johnson, general manager of Edaville Railroad. "Now that we've spent some extra money, people seem to be coming here, and going away very impressed. People are saying this is the best the light festival has ever been. Some people have even walked up to me and thanked us all for bringing this event back."

"It's very nostalgic for a lot of folks," Kindy added. "Families love going to the event together, and so do older people who remember what the place was like a long time ago.

The Edaville Railroad's Light Festival is open from Nov.17 and will continue through Jan.7, 2001.

Edaville Railroad offers us all a view of what life was like at a simpler time."

Admission to Edaville Railroad costs $12.50 for adults, $7.50 for children 12 and under, and $10.50 for senior citizens. Children 3-years-old and under get in free. For more information on the Christmas light festival or other railroad events, call (508) 866-8190 or log onto the website at www.edaville.org.

botanical businesses — more than 20 local South Shore shops will partake in the event.

All the different businesses will set up "an array of wreaths, swags and trees inspired by nature." The public is invited to come view all the crafts which will be set up at the exhibit.

At the silent auction which is held Dec.1, the crafts will be auctioned off, but they will remain at the science center through the following day.

"We have a nice mix of different types of people coming in to display their work," Reid said. "The event will mainly consist of the wreaths and swags, but there will also be tables for miniature Christmas trees decorated in various themes."

"We have a nice mix of different types of people coming in to display their work. The event will mainly consist of the wreaths and swags, but there will also be tables for miniature Christmas trees decorated in various themes."

-Joan Reid of the South Shore Science Center

Reid said she is one of the people who is actually decorating a small tree in an "ocean theme." She said her tree will be decorated with things like sea glass and sea shells.

"Different groups will have different themes for their trees," she added. "Everyone has been asked to use their creativity. But even though the trees are part of the event, I'm expecting that 80 percent of the crafts at the exhibit will be wreaths."

Rhonda Haavisto, owner of Paper Petals in Marshfield, said she is doing a unique table-top tree for the show at the science center.

"I'll be decorating my tree with things like mini-bird houses," Haavisto said. She said some of the mini-houses will have roofs made out of materials like potpourri and pine cones.

"It's fun when you can get a community involved in a project like this," Haavisto said. "In this case, that's what's happening."

Haavisto said she and Darlene Beauvais of the Church Hill Herbary in Norwell were the first people who came up with the initial idea to hold an event like "A Natural Christmas." Reid was the woman who took the reigns, and got the event going.

"When the idea was given to me, I basically took the ball and ran with it," Reid said. "It was only last summer that we actually got this off the ground. We'd like to have it as an annual event and build on it as the years go by so it becomes a lasting tradition with us."

Reid said the silent auction and reception will be geared more towards adults, but children can come to the science center the following day if they would like to. She said refreshments will be served at the auction, and it will prove to be "a festive holiday atmosphere."

"The whole thing should be really good," Reid added. "People around this area will enjoy seeing all these new ideas for holiday decorations. More to the point, people can learn how decorative natural materials can actually be."

"It'll definitely give some people ideas on what to do in their own homes in terms of decorating for the holidays," said Tina Watson of Saltmarsh Farms Bed and Breakfast in Cohasset. Watson said she will be displaying a table-top tree in the show.

"There's some really creative people out there," Reid added. "And they can do amazing things with natural materials."

For more information on "A Natural Christmas," call the science center at (781) 659-2559. Admission for the silent auction and reception is $5. General admission to the science center is $3.

Whitman Homes breaks ground at Pinehills

Whitman Homes, one of Massachusetts' premier homebuilders on the South Shore, has been selected by The Pinehills to build high end, custom homes within this new, 3,000-acre community in Plymouth. Whitman Homes' president, Richard Whittington, announced that the company will initially build 24 custom-designed homes ranging in price from $500,000 to $1 million in a neighborhood called "Chipping Hill."

Whitman Homes' agreement with the Pinehills will enable it to overcome one of the biggest obstacles facing luxury home builders — the lack of desirable home sites on which to build.

Pinehills says this is especially good news for Massachusetts' homebuyers, who are leading the way when it comes to demand for luxury homes. For the second consecutive year, prices for single-family homes in Massachusetts rose faster than those in any other state, according to the Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Climbing 13.7 percent for the 12-month period ending June 30, 2000, this gain comes on the heels of a 9.3 percent rise the previous year, contributing to an almost 45 percent rise in prices over the last five years.

According to experts, never before has the building market had as many favorable economic indicators in alignment at once, with low interest rates and inflation, combined with a strong economy and low unemployment. Experts say the numbers indicate that the boom is not just in Boston, but has spread to the rest of the state.

Whitman Homes has been recognized by the National Builders Advisory Board and ranked as one of the "Top 25 Builders" in eastern Massachusetts.

"We are honored to be chosen as the 'design-build' company for one of the first neighborhoods at The Pinehills," said Whittington. "The Pinehills is the most exciting new community in the Northeast. Its picturesque setting is an excellent opportunity to showcase our custom-built homes and architectural design capabilities," he added.

The company's in-house architectural team, led by principal and staff architect Bart O'Brien, works closely with each homebuyer, determining design preferences from analyzing how living space will be used. The end result is a home tailored to meet individual needs, featuring fine architectural details and custom interior finishes.

Tim Porter, vice president of sales and marketing for Whitman Homes, said buyers can select from a variety of wooded home sites overlooking The Pinehills Golf Club. He anticipates strong demand for these home sites, most of which overlook a fairway on either the Rees Jones or Nicklaus Design courses.

The Pinehills plans 2,854 homes within a variety of neighborhoods, the Village-on-the-Green for businesses, shops, restaurants and a Marriott Conference Center Resort, recreational amenities, nature trails and up to four professionally designed golf courses, including the Rees Jones and Nicklaus Design courses currently under construction.

"Finding land that has been virtually untouched by time and development this close to Boston and Cape Cod is no small feat, " according to Whittington. "We're very excited at the prospect of helping build the future at The Pinehills, the largest new community under construction in New England," he added.

The Pinehills has been sensitively designed to take advantage of the site's pristine beauty. Only 30 percent of the land will be built upon, with over 2,100 acres set aside for recreation and open space. Careful siting of homes ensures the greatest view potential, including dramatic vistas stretching across golf fairways, woodland hills and secluded valleys.

The Pinehills is being created by the principals of New England Development, The Green Companies and Wallace Associates, and officially opened this fall.

Participation in Home and Lifestyle WORKSHOPS, Road and Home Siting Walks, Builder Neighborhood Walks, Historical Tours and Golf Tours of The Pinehills may be arranged upon request. For more information about Whitman Homes or The Pinehills, call (508) 209-2000, or write to 33 Summerhouse Drive, Plymouth 02360.

IN BRIEF

Century 21 Walker Bros. announces new ownership

Century 21 Walker Bros., a real estate company in Duxbury since 1909, introduces its new ownership. With more than 18 years experience in real estate management and brokerage, Walker Bros. new broker/owner Karl Pease was licensed as a real estate broker in 1973. He currently owns and operates the successful Century 21 Florence Kates Fine Homes and Estates offices in Sharon and Stoughton.

The office's new managing partner, Phil Ford, brings more than 20 years of experience in real estate development, fine home building and real estate brokerage to the Walker Bros. team. Ford has recently completed the intensive five-day Century 21 International Management Academy Training. Both look forward to managing this company and serving the communities of Plymouth County.

Century 21 Walker Bros. is the oldest continuously operating real estate office in Duxbury. It was founded in 1909 by the late Percy L. Walker and remained in the Walker family for 86 years. In 1995 it was sold to John and Doris Kolstad, long-time residents of Duxbury and the South Shore.

MacLellan to head drive for DOVE

The Norwell office of The DeWolfe Company Inc. has for the fifth year chosen Joyce MacLellan to head their drive to collect gifts for DOVE.

DOVE is a South Shore organization that supports safe havens for women and children who are victims of domestic violence. Gifts of unwrapped new toys, clothing and toiletries can be placed under the DOVE tree in the lobby of the DeWolfe office at 316 Washington St. in Norwell or call Joyce MacLellan at 659-7955 and she will pick up your donations.

The associates in the Norwell office of DeWolfe again this year assembled items for Thanksgiving dinners with all the trimmings and distributed them through the VNA. Nine baskets in total were prepared and donated to Norwell, Scituate and Hanover.

Hingham resident joins DeWolfe team

The DeWolfe Company announced recently that Dianne Costello of Hingham has joined their team in Hingham. Costello has enjoyed a career in real estate for 18 years and brings with her a great deal of experience.

She and her husband Peter and their six children have lived in Hingham for 23 years. Costello has served on the Hingham High School Advisory committee, the Parent/Teacher Organization and is presently an active board member of the South Shore Day Care Services. In her spare time she enjoys golf and is a member of Cohasset Gold Club.

3M and FEMA partner to protect disaster-prone areas

3M has announced that it is partnering with the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) in Project Impact, a nationwide effort to help safeguard citizens by making communities more disaster-resistant.

Locally, the town of Marshfield is a FEMA designated Project Impact community.

Project Impact was developed by FEMA to encourage communities and businesses throughout the U.S. to take actions that protect their citizens and businesses from the effects of natural disasters such as hurricanes and other severe storms, earthquakes, floods and wildfires. More than 200 areas have already been designated as Project Impact communities.

Since the development of FEMA's Project Impact in October 1997, the federal disaster agency has formed partnerships with every U.S. state and territory and has joined with more than 1,000 businesses. It has also provided technical assistance and seed money to Project Impact communities. Project Impact business partners have contributed discounted materials and expertise to support Project Impact communities' efforts to prevent property damage or injury during national disasters such as hurricanes and tornadoes.

3M will contribute to Project Impact by offering 3M Scotchshield™ Ultra Safety and Security window films at reduced cost to daycare centers and K-12 schools in Project Impact communities. Tests have shown that 3M window films can help reduce the effects of disasters. In addition to offering the films at a reduced price, 3M will assist in providing a means of installation.

We are certainly pleased to join with FEMA and its Project Impact communities on this initiative," said Rochelle Knops, 3M sales and marketing coordinator. "By significantly reducing the overall cost of the materials, we're making it possible for daycare centers and schools throughout the country to afford these protective measures. Our films help reduce damage from hurricanes and other severe storms by holding shattered glass together to reduce the chance of injury from glass shards."

According to Knops, the resistance of the 3M Scotchshield™Ultra Safety and Security window films to penetration and tearing also helps deter vandalism and theft because these qualities make it difficult to smash through the glass. In addition to their protective capabilities, the window films can increase energy efficiency by reducing heat gain by up to 72 percent. And, they can reduce fading of interior furnishings, including fabrics, art, and wood, by filtering out up to 99 percent of harmful ultraviolet rays.

In addition to safety hazards and human suffering, natural disasters can also inflict economic damage on communities. Studies indicate that 40 percent of all small businesses affected by disasters never reopen, and another 25 percent close within a year. For large businesses, disaster-related shutdowns can result in millions of dollars in losses.

Dress up your home for the holidays

Indoors, Mowbray said gilded, glittered and frosted looks are popular, along with theme trees, where one decorating scheme dominates the whole tree.

"This year we have a woodland and lodging tree, lots of natural things. We also have a girl tree, with lots of pinks and creams, with the tree itself her skirt. Snowmen are also always popular," he said.

Mowbray said Village Gardens sells a lot of light spheres, small balls of lights used to brighten window boxes, baskets of greens or any place the homeowner can think of.

At Kennedy's, where they decorate several trees every year, the major trend is back to traditional reds and greens with some gold, according to Diane Kennedy.

"It's traditional, but traditional for 2000. It's a very elegant look," said Kennedy, who said millennium theme decorations are still popular.

And don't forget fragrance when decorating the home, said Kennedy, who said potpourris and votive candles can spread the holiday scent throughout the house.

Kennedy said that while it's unrealistic to expect homeowners to have a new Christmas look in their homes every year, they can update their look with just a few things.

"People can add to what they've already got. To get our new red and green tree, they could easily pick up a dozen ornaments, add some new ribbon and it's a new look. The important thing is to stick with what you really love," she said.

11 High Cost Home Inspection Traps You Should Know About Weeks Before Listing Your Home For Sale

According to industry experts, there are over 33 physical problems that will come under scrutiny during a home inspection when your home is for sale. A new report has been prepared which identifies the eleven most common of these problems, and what you should know about them before you list your home for sale.

Whether you own an old home or a brand new one, there are a number of things that can fall short of requirements during a home inspection. If not identified and dealt with, any of these 11 items could cost you dearly in terms of repair. That's why it's critical that you read this report before you list your home. If you wait until the building inspector flags these issues for you, you will almost certainly experience costly delays in the close of your home sale or, worse, turn prospective buyers away altogether.

In most cases, you can make a reasonable pre-inspection yourself if you know what you're looking for. And knowing what you're looking for can help you prevent little problems from growing into costly and unmanageable ones.

To help homesellers seal with this issue before their home is listed, a free report entitled "11 Things You Need to Know to Pass Your Home Inspection" has been compiled which explains the issues involved.

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your FREE copy of this report, call 1-800-581-1081 and enter ID#12087. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Call NOW to learn how to ensure a home inspection doesn't cost you the sale of your home.

Putting the garden to bed

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Our pleasant autumn weather continues. Moderate temperatures and a limited number of frosty evenings have significantly extended our planting and growing season enabling procrastinators like myself to make substantial progress in our efforts to plant, renovate and prepare new beds and borders. Copious moisture has helped to settle and establish these new plantings and has facilitated the germination and growth of recently seeded lawns. Trees, shrubs and perennials should enter the winter months well-watered and better able to withstand the challenges of desiccating winds and cold temperatures. As the holiday season approaches, however, the time has come to finalize preparations for winter and put the gardens to bed.

Despite this season's absence of hard killing frosts, plants which managed to escape early chills began to enter their dormant phase by mid-November in response to shorter day length. Perennial borders should be trimmed, raked and weeded in the weeks to come. Plants which have entered dormancy are best cut back to 3-to-4 inches tall as decomposing stems and leaves left through the winter months may promote diseases and encourage slugs, chipmunks, mice, voles and other unwanted critters to nest among the debris and feed on bulbs and perennial roots. A heavy-duty hedge shears can effectively reduce a jungle of dead foliage to a neat and tidy border in minimal time.

Take a moment to observe and analyze the waning plants before chopping them to the ground. Some seed heads and foliages provide winter interest by contributing texture, motion and sound to the dormant landscape including those of ornamental grasses and sedums. Other seed heads, especially those of coneflowers (both Echinacea and Rudbeckia), asters and goldenrod, produce seeds loved by many bird species including chickadees, titmice and goldfinches. Selective pruning of unattractive, decaying foliage around evergreen perennials and shrubs, fruit-bearing plants, and attractive seed heads, will maximize their appearance.

As you trim, rake, weed, haul and compost, keep a notebook handy to jot down a list of changes to be made next season. Make note of plants which need division, transplanting or pruning. Take a head count of your traditional annual plantings in beds and container gardens to facilitate next year's purchases. A garden journal is an essential tool which should be used throughout the year to record environmental influences, list pleasing plant combinations, document plant successes and failures and note bloom periods for shrubs, trees and perennial plants.

Tender summer bulbs need to be lifted and stored, using a spading fork to reduce the risk of slicing the bulbs. The corms of gladiolus should be dug while the stems are still attached to prevent injury to the corm. Cut stems to 1 inch and dry the bulbs in the sun for a few hours and cure for about two weeks in a well-ventilated area. Cut dahlia stems back to 4 inches and carefully loosen the tubers from the surrounding soil. Wash the soil from the roots and allow to dry completely for one or two days. Cannas, caladiums, and tuberous begonias should be lifted and dried in an airy, dark place without danger of freezing for a few days. Cut off dead foliage and gently brush off dried soil. Store these summer bulbs in dry peat moss, saw dust, perlite, vermiculite or sand at 40 to 50 degrees in shallow trays or brown paper bags.

Prepare the vegetable garden now for planting next season. Lift and remove frost tender plants. It is best not to compost tomato foliage or any other leaves which may have been diseased. For gardens with heavy, poor, or depleted soils, consider planting a cover crop of winter rye which can be tilled into the soil next spring or spread lime and wood ashes and turn into the soil with several inches of organic material in the form of shredded leaves, seaweed, well-decomposed manure, or compost. Because our springs are frequently cool and damp, unprepared soils are often too wet and heavy to start cool weather crops and our attempts to work the soil early in the spring may only lead to further compaction. A fall cleanup, conditioning, and tilling of the vegetable garden will ensure an earlier planting season next spring.

Many cold weather veggies can be harvested throughout the winter months and may actually improve in flavor after a few frosts. Brussels sprouts, broccoli, kale and leeks continue to thrive in cooler weather. Carrots and parsnips should be mulched and marked so they can be found beneath the snow. Colder temperatures change the starch to sugar and make them even tastier. They should be harvested before spring growth begins.

Any cleanup which can be accomplished at this time of year will give you a head start on the spring rush and will lessen the risk of losses due to weather, disease, or critters during the winter months.

Dickens' holiday classic performed in Norwell

A holiday festival performance of Charles Dickens' classic story "A Christmas Carol" will benefit the MainSpring House homeless shelter and The Charity Guild food pantry.

The special show, hosted by the Jack Conway Company, will be held Thursday, Nov. 30, at 7:30 p.m. at the Company Theatre (formerly the Nickerson Theater) in Norwell.

Tickets are $50 per person and the price includes an invitation to a pre-show reception at the theater beginning at 7 p.m. All proceeds from the performance will go to the two South Shore charitable organizations.

The Brockton Coalition for the Homeless operates MainSpring House in Brockton, which provides shelter, food, educational programs and counseling to individuals and families in need. MainSpring houses as many as 60 homeless individuals per night; Conway House in Middleboro provides shelter for13 homeless families in a residence on East Grove Street.

The Charity Guild Inc. is a Brockton-based non-profit organization that provides food, clothing and donated household items to low-income individuals and families throughout the region. The group operates a food pantry and thrift store on North Main Street. It receives no state funding and pays for its programs through the generous contributions of its members, area residents and local businesses.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Gwyneth Paltrow and Ben Affleck try to figure out just who each other is.

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Bounce (B-)

Today's featured movies have nothing in common except one featured performer, Tony Goldwyn, who deserves better vehicles if he is to transcend his famous name into the star category. At least in "Bounce" he is out of the way early and can, figuratively speaking, watch as the film crumbles around those who survive him. Goldwyn plays Greg, a harried, miserable, delayed plane traveler — or is that a redundancy? — who, coming to terms with a canceled flight and the prospect of getting home only the next day, meets a slick ad man, Buddy (Ben Affleck), who has the last ticket for the same flight as poor Greg and, having met a babe whom he's sure he can bed then and there, opts to wait till the next day to get home to L.A. and gives his ticket to Greg. Everyone's happy: Greg can get home to his wife, Abby (Gwyneth Paltrow), and their sons; Buddy gets a sure thing.

Beautifully photographed throughout, the movie is graced next by a finely composed scene at the L.A. airport, where, from a distance, we see Abby learning that, despite her initial belief that her husband had been bumped and would be coming home later, he has died in a crash. Buddy, meanwhile, letting his emotions get the better of his reason, hastens to blame himself for the hapless Greg's death, soon succumbing to demon rum and humiliating himself at an awards ceremony where his firm is honored for a lugubrious ad campaign for the airline featuring testimonials to the dead — an ad campaign, by the way, that never in a zillion years would any agency not out of its collective gourd create in such a situation. Having cascaded over the edge, Buddy toddles off to a rehab center, emerging months later, clean and sober and interested now in finding out how the widow is doing.

And so into the mosh pit of Fits and Starts Emotion City we slide, with Buddy meeting Abby cute, Abby romancing Buddy, Buddy buddying up to Abby's two rugrats (David Dorfman and Alex D. Linz), the two moving ever closer to commitment, but Buddy never telling Abby exactly who he is or that he ever met Greg. Things go wrong and here the movie goes bonkers, with Buddy unable to shake himself out of his ridiculous guilt — giving a lonely husband a plane ticket and getting himself a night with a pretty lady is not exactly a hanging offense. The thing spins itself out of and then back into control.

Both stars are lovingly shot in close-ups that with less appealing performers would be unpleasant. The "diversity" performers are given their stereotypical due: Buddy's assistant (Johnny Galecki), the gay token, is a smart-ass and wise beyond his years; and the black token (Joe Morton) is Buddy's boss. Thus it ever is in Hollywood in our cynical times, when if nothing else the makers of movies always know how to take care of their PC commitments. If only they had known how to consider their product's believability quotient.

The 6th Day (C+)

Except that Arnold Schwarzenegger is certifiably bankable — you can entomb him in almost any movie and be guaranteed big box office — and Tony Goldwyn isn't, just reversing their roles here would have made "The 6th Day" a much better picture. Goldwyn, no star, is a versatile actor who can convey vulnerability, tenderness and determination easily — he lingers in the memory in "Bounce" even after only five minutes onscreen — whereas the mighty Ah-nold, powerful oak that he is, simply comes off doofusy when he isn't killing people — preferably bad people, though anyone will do — with mad abandon. The magnificent biceps remain awe-inspiring, the rock jaw is suitable for chiseling onto Mount Rushmore and for sheer fun (if mayhem is your idea of fun), he gives good bang for the buck; still, no slam on Schwarzenegger, let's face it: He doesn't so much act as exist.

Here we another of those Science Is Dangerous alarmist movies that plays with our understandable revulsion at the notion of human cloning. Though many people are warming to the idea of cloning Fido or Mr. Whiskers when our faithful companion grows old and goes to that great food dish in the sky, cloning little Trevor or wee Melinda were they to sicken and die is not yet high on the national agenda. Moreover (and these details keep getting in the way), while we will likely be able to clone people before long (we've done sheep, rats, cows and probably other mammals we've not yet been told about), the procedure requires that little inconvenience, birth and then growth. The movie's scientist, Dr. Weir (Robert Duvall) — add a "d" to the character's name if you're in a playful mood — has figured out hoe to take a fully adult human and in two hours clone him. Which, for reasons that we gradually learn, he has done to our hero, a helicopter pilot, who, seeing his wife in the company of, well, himself, realizes that something is wrong. And we're off.

"The 6th Day" has its charms, among them: the aforementioned Dr. Weir, who has a tender scene with his wife; Michael Rapaport (the impossibly idiotic wannabe-black white boss in "Bamboozled), as a fellow pilot who has a hologram hottie awaiting him at home each night; Goldwyn, in glasses and a slicked-down haircut, as the Bill Gates of tomorrow, master of all he surveys, the honcho of cloning, the major Bad Guy; some impressive scenes with Arnold and Arnold together; a not unreasonable series of chases, killings, explosions and the sort of sci-fi hooey that passes for The Future in movies; plus a memorable line (if not quite as good as "I'll be back" or "You're luggage" from earlier Arnold flicks). Seeing a guy and his clone locked in a near-death embrace, our hero says: "When I told you to screw yourself I didn't mean you should take it literally." That's worth keeping. Otherwise, the movie is laughable, especially when Arnold tries to emote. But watch the money come rolling in. That's what's meant by star power. And Arnold, even by twos, has it. Big time.

Use frequent-flyer miles to upgrade

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. My wife and I are hoping to go to Europe this spring. When I look up airline fares on the Internet, coach fares are quite reasonable, but when I try to upgrade to business class, the cost is from $5,000 to $6,000 per person more. Is there any way to get discounted upgrades?

Ask George

A. One way is to use any frequent-flyer miles you might have to upgrade. Because of the vast price difference between economy and business-class fares, this is a good way to "burn" miles.

Ticket Planet (www.ticketplanet.com or 1-800-799-8888) regularly offers "consolidator" fares of $2,500 RT between the United States and Europe in business class. They even have New York to London in first class for $2,600.

The downside? As with all consolidator tickets, you may or may not get frequent-flyer miles, you may or may not be flying on an airline you wouldn't normally consider (like Air India), and if there's a flight irregularity (such as a mechanical problem), you won't automatically be put on a competing airline's flight.

Q. I am traveling to Seattle on business the first week of April 2001, with my parents, who are in their late 70s. None of us has been to Vancouver, so we would like to spend two or three days there, too. Can you recommend reasonably priced accommodations at a nice hotel in a good location?

A. A good choice would be the Hotel Vintage Park (800-624-4433; www.vintagepark.com, 1100 Fifth Ave.,) in the heart of Seattle's retail and financial district. It is within walking distance of the city's boutiques and theaters, and attractions such as Pike Place Market, the Seattle Art Museum, the waterfront and the Seattle Ferry Terminal.

The rack rate for April 2001, is $255 although QuikBook, the hotel consolidator (www.quikbook.com or 1-800-789-9887), recently listed the hotel for $175 per night. Since the U.S. dollar is so strong against the Canadian dollar right now, almost anything is quite a bargain.

A good option in Vancouver is the Pacific Palisades Hotel (604-688-0461; www.pacificpalisadeshotel.com) on Robson Street. This hotel is situated in the middle of Vancouver, and is walking distance of the Vancouver Art Gallery and Stanley Park and just blocks from the Canadian Craft Museum and The Law Courts. The rate for the rooms are about $U.S. 170 per night.

Q. I have heard about Chateau Lake Louise and would like to stay there for a few nights, depending upon the price. Do they have any discounted room rates?

Also, I have searched several Web sites and cannot find any information on flights from Vancouver or Seattle to Banff. (I presume we would fly into Banff, or is there another airport at Lake Louise?)

Are there any reasonably priced flights? And, if we fly into Banff, how would we get from the airport to Lake Louise?

A. To get to Chateau Lake Louise (1-800-441-1414; www.chateaulakelouise.com), it is recommended that you fly into Calgary, about 120 miles away. You can fly from Seattle with Air Canada or Alaska Airlines for about $150, or from Vancouver for about $80 with either Air Canada or Canada 3000 at current prices.

You can either drive or take a regularly scheduled shuttle from the airport to the Chateau. Rates in April at the Chateau are as low as $U.S. 168 per night, including breakfast.

Q. Is there a one-stop Web site for booking airfare that shows not just normal airfares but also airline cyberfares, and that includes fares from all airlines, big and small? Travelocity and Expedia don't show cyberfares, and Expedia doesn't include all airlines like Southwest.

A. You're right that most airfare booking sites don't show cyberfares alongside regular "published" fares. A new "plug in" called Sidestep may be the answer.

After downloading the plug-in from www.sidestep.com, it searches every airline's own Web site to find the lowest available fare, whether it's a cyberfare or published fare, and then lists the best options.

Sidestep works only with Internet Explorer and only on IBM-compatible PCs, not Macintoshes. Also, Sidestep requires that you enter a date of travel, which may or may not be the best date for the lowest fare available between any two cities.

George Hobica

Another option is to visit www.digitalcity.com/travel and then click on your city and then on "daily deals." This site lists a selection of the day's best airfares, both cyber and published, side by side for easy comparison, and includes all airlines, including Southwest and smaller niche carriers.

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

'No money down' loans - they're not just for veterans anymore

By Carol Bulman
PRESIDENT CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

Carol Bulman

"No money down," "Zero down payment," "100-percent financing" — sound like an infomercial on late-night television?

Believe it or not, the 100-percent loan has become a reality to many qualified homeowners with little money to put down on a home. This opportunity was previously available only to veterans or for those currently in the service through the Veterans Administration.

The availability of mortgage money to lend, a strong economy and many people looking to buy houses has caused lenders to respond by offering unique opportunities in mortgage programs.

The 100-percent or "no money down" programs feature no cash down payment, a competitive — although not necessarily rock-bottom — interest rate, available for an owner-occupied (no investment property) single-family home or condominium. There are both fixed-rate and fixed/adjustable hybrid options available.

Also, there's good news for teachers through a new 100-percent program, called Zero Down Teacher Flex. The details are generally the same as discussed above but teachers will receive a break in the interest rate they will pay. These programs are offered by several entities through local lenders or mortgage brokers.

What's the catch?

Well, it's not necessarily a catch but these special programs are certainly targeted to well-qualified borrowers with very good credit history and stable employment. When considering a loan application, a lender may look for a stronger factor that would "compensate" for a weaker one. In the case of the 100-percent loan, the weaker factor is the amount of cash invested in the transaction, making it a riskier loan for the lender. The compensating factor a lender would be looking for in this case would be excellent credit and strong ability to repay the loan. This information would be verified by the lender via a credit report and verification of the borrower's employment. The 100-percent loan offered by most lenders and mortgage brokers generally requires some monetary involvement from the buyer, or a gift from a relative toward the closing costs and prepaid costs. Standard closing costs include attorney fees, recording fees, plot plan, title insurance and points. Prepaid items include real estate taxes and homeowners insurance, if applicable.

The Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) recently unveiled a 100-percent loan that targets buyers who earn less than the median income limits set by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in each city and town. These income guidelines vary from community to community, so call our office for the exact amount in your area.

To further encourage homeownership and opportunity, this program will allow less-than-perfect credit and some flexibility in qualifying. This program is available to salaried individuals only and is also allowable on owner-occupied, single-family homes and condominiums.

Another program available through some lenders and brokers is an expanded 100-percent loan that allows a buyer to borrow in excess of the value of the property, including the cost of closing. In this case, the credit and borrower profile would need to be exemplary and the interest rate may be adjusted slightly to allow for the additional risk. The loan for this buyer is mostly secured by the real estate with a small percentage unsecured. Why would an individual wish to put no money down on a house and borrow for their closing cost? It may sound old-fashioned, but the sooner a buyer "buys" into the opportunity for the American Dream, the quicker the positive results will begin — the building of equity, the accumulation of tax benefits, and the improvement of credit. Borrowers who use these niche programs may wonder, "Is this the program for me?" If you have access to funds for a down payment in the form of savings, gift or otherwise, be sure that your loan officer provides a comparison of the costs and benefits of the program, as well as the costs and benefits for any other program you may be researching. Often, this is a personal choice based on your savings habits and your goals.

Conway Financial Services loan originators can provide more information regarding these 100-percent loans and a comparison to other mortgage programs available.

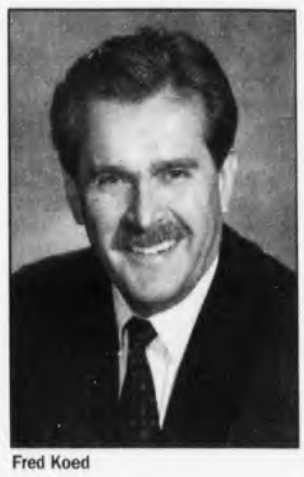
Selectman helps to make history

Fred Koed plays key role in Florida recount



Fred Koed

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Fifty years from now, when historians are reliving the dramatic Presidential election of 2000, they'll be able to turn their sights to Cohasset Selectman Fred Koed.

On Monday, Koed will submit his electoral vote for Vice President Al Gore when Massachusetts casts its ballots for president as part of the Electoral College. And that vote will come a month after Koed flew down to Palm Beach County to count some other famous votes, known as the Florida presidential punch-card ballots.

From Nov. 13, to Dec. 1, Koed was the head tally clerk for the Democratic party in Palm Beach during the famous hand recount authorized by the Florida Supreme Court. It was Koed that kept track of all the precincts' results and then argued the undecided votes with Republican counterparts before the county commissioner. It was Koed that finally determined that Gore had gained 215 votes in Palm Beach County, though a few hours past the deadline.

"In one sense it was like all the other recounts; the basics are the same," said Koed who has been involved in, by his count, 20 recounts in Massachusetts. "But this was the big time. This wasn't a selectman's race, this was a presidential election."

"For me, it's nice after all these years working on recounts, which is a kind of thankless job in many senses, to finally have a nice skill set that allows me to be a witness to history."
— Selectman Fred Koed

Koed was tapped by Boston attorney Dennis Newman, who was hired by Palm Beach County Democrats to oversee the recount. Newman knew Koed from a number of recounts the two had worked on across Massachusetts, such as the Phil Johnston/Bill Delahunt recount in 1996, and the Bob Hedlund/Christy Mihos recount in 1990. Koed's first recount was in 1984 when there was a dead-heat in a Cohasset selectman's race between Mary Jane McArthur and Doris Golden.

"I have a lot of experience in recounts. Recounts are a specialty within itself. Inside that, is keeping track of the results," Koed explained. "For me, it's nice after all these years working on recounts, which is a kind of thankless job in many senses, to finally have a nice skill set that allows me to be a witness to history."

He had a nice view, too, sitting right next to the commissioner's table. "One of the judges said I had the best seat in the house," Koed recalled.

He was called by Newman at 2 p.m. on Nov. 13, and was on the Road rage is on the rise

Sixteen incidents since April

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset is not exempt from the recent phenomenon known as road rage. Since the police department started keeping track of such incidents in April, 16 calls have been received from drivers who feel they have been the victims of road rage. Nine of these instances have happened in just the past two months.

"It's been reports of aggressive driving to the point where someone feels threatened," explained Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson. "We don't have an official definition but when we see it or hear it, we know what it is."

"We don't have an official definition but when we see it or hear it, we know what it is."

So far the incidents have ranged from tailgating, to verbal confrontations, and in one instance, running someone off then road.

"It's more than someone flipping the bird and then driving off," said Officer Christy Tarantino. Tarantino told of a time he responded to a call

Mother wants to stop 'living out of boxes'

This is one story in an ongoing series as part of CNC's Gifts of Hope campaign.

SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Stacey is seeing the face of homelessness first hand.

The 29-year-old has been homeless since Jan., 1999, moving from place to place since then. Now, Stacey is living with her 4-year-old daughter at the Carolina Hill Shelter in Marshfield. She also has a 5-year-old son who currently lives with her mother and father.

"He's doing really well in school right now," Stacey said of her son. "It would be unfair to pull him away from that right now.

"It's just a waiting game for me. I'm on about 80 different lists for public housing — some of those lists have two-year waits, and I'm even on a list that has a 12-year wait. I want to have a decent life, and I want to have a house where I can live with both of my kids. But it's just about waiting right now."

Stacey's personal road has been long and frightening — in addition to adjusting to a constantly changing life of moving around, Stacey is also on the run from an abusive relationship. That is where her whole story begins.

"This all really started when I got involved with this man about five years ago," Stacey said. "He had a problem with his temper."

She explained that at the time, she was living in an apartment on the South Shore. Her boyfriend with the "temper" actually lived with her at that time. Eventually, Stacey and her boyfriend were evicted from that place because she lost her job and failed to pay the rent.

But in August 1998, she found a

Who's the town's citizen of the year?

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

The deadline for nominations for the 2000 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 5. Please see the nomination form on page 15. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the 2000

'No money down' loans - they're not just for veterans anymore

By Carol Bulman
PRESIDENT CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

"No money down," "Zero down payment," "100-percent financing" — sound like an infomercial on late-night television?

Believe it or not, the 100-percent loan has become a reality to many qualified homeowners with little money to put down on a home. This opportunity was previously available only to veterans or for those currently in the service through the Veterans Administration.

The availability of mortgage money to lend, a strong economy and many people looking to buy houses has caused lenders to respond by offering unique opportunities in mortgage programs.

The 100-percent or "no money down" programs feature no cash down payment, a competitive — although not necessarily rock-bottom — interest rate, available for an owner-occupied (no investment property) single-family home or condominium. There are both fixed-rate and fixed/adjustable hybrid options available.

Also, there's good news for teachers through a new 100-percent program, called Zero Down Teacher Flex. The details are generally the same as discussed above but teachers will receive a break in the interest rate they will pay. These programs are offered by several entities through local lenders or mortgage brokers.

What's the catch?

Well, it's not necessarily a catch but these special programs are certainly targeted to well-qualified borrowers with very good credit history and stable employment. When considering a loan application, a lender may look for a stronger factor that would "compensate" for a weaker one. In the case of the 100-percent loan, the weaker factor is the amount of cash invested in the transaction, making it a riskier loan for the lender. The compensating factor a lender would be looking for in this case would be excellent credit and strong ability to repay the loan. This information would be verified by the lender via a credit report and verification of the borrower's employment. The 100-percent loan offered by most lenders and mortgage brokers generally requires some monetary involvement from the buyer, or a gift from a relative toward the closing costs and prepaid costs. Standard closing costs include attorney fees, recording fees, plot plan, title insurance and points. Prepaid items include real estate taxes and homeowners insurance, if applicable.

The Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) recently unveiled a 100-percent loan that targets buyers who earn less than the median income limits set by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in each city and town. These income guidelines vary from community to community, so call our office for the exact amount in your area.

To further encourage homeownership and opportunity, this program will allow less-than-perfect credit and some flexibility in qualifying. This program is available to salaried individuals only and is also allowable on owner-occupied, single-family homes and condominiums.
